CIRCULAR OF INFORMATION.

AIM AND PURPOSE OF THE SCHOOL.

The Board of Education, by a vote passed May 6, 1880, stated the design of the school and the course of studies for the State normal schools as follows: —

The design of the normal school is strictly professional; that is, to prepare in the best possible manner the pupils for the work of organizing, governing and teaching the public schools of the Commonwealth.

To this end there must be the most thorough knowledge: first, of the branches of learning required to be taught in the schools; second, of the best methods of teaching these branches; and third, of right mental training.

CONDITIONS OF ADMISSION.

Candidates for admission to any one of the normal schools must have attained the age of seventeen years complete if young men, and sixteen years if young women, and must have shown upon physical examination that they are free from any disease or infirmity which would unfit them for the office of teacher.

They must present a certificate of good moral character, give evidence of good intellectual capacity, be graduates of a high school whose courses of study have been approved by the Board of Education, or they must have received, to the satisfaction of the principal and the Board of Visitors of the school, the equivalent of a good high school education. Candidates must also declare their intention to complete the course of study in the school and afterwards to teach in the public schools of Massachusetts.

Tuition is free to residents of Massachusetts, but each non-resident pupil is required to pay a tuition fee of $25 at the beginning of each half-yearly session.

II. Mathematics. — (a) The elements of algebra and (b) the elements of plane geometry.

III. History and Geography. — The history and civil government of Massachusetts and the United States, with related geography and so much of English history as is directly contributory to a knowledge of United States history.

V. Drawing and Music. — (a) Elementary, mechanical and free-hand drawing, with any one of the topics, — form, color and arrangement; and (b) musical notation, with ability to sing, if practicable.

I. — LANGUAGES.

(a) ENGLISH. — The subjects of the examination will be the same as those generally agreed upon by the colleges and high technical schools of New England.

The books for study in 1909 are: Shakespeare's Macbeth; Milton's L'Allegro; Burke's Speech on Conciliation with America, or Washington's Farewell Address and Webster's First Bunker Hill Oration; Macaulay's Life of Johnson, or Carlyle's Essay on Burns.

The purpose of the examination is to discover, (1) whether the student has a good habit of study, (2) whether he has formed any standards of literary judgment, (3) whether he has become discerning of literary merit, and (4) what acquaintance he has with standard English and American writers.

The examination will take such a form that students who have followed other than the prescribed lines of reading may be able to satisfy the examiners on the above points.

In addition, the candidate may be required to answer questions involving the essentials of English grammar, and questions on the leading facts in those periods of English literary history to which the prescribed works belong.

(b) One only of the two languages, Latin and French. The translation at sight of simple prose, with questions on the usual forms and ordinary constructions of the language.

II. — Mathematics.

(a) The elements of algebra through affected quadratic equations.

(b) The elements of plane geometry, including original work, both with theorems and problems.

III. — United States History.

The examination calls for a knowledge of the history and civil government of Massachusetts and the United States, with related geography and so much of English history as is directly contributory to a knowledge of United States history.

IV. — Sciences.

(a) Physiology and Hygiene. — The elementary facts of anatomy, the general functions of the various organs, the more obvious rules of health, and the effects of alcoholic drinks, narcotics and stimulants upon those addicted to their use.

(b) and (c) Any two of the following sciences, — physics, chemistry, botany, physical geography, — provided one of the two is either physics or chemistry. The elementary principles of these subjects, so far as they may be presented in the courses usually devoted to them in good high schools.

V. — Drawing and Music.

(a) Drawing. — Mechanical and freehand drawing, enough to enable the candidate to draw a simple object, like a box or a pyramid or a cylinder, with plan and elevation to scale, and to make a freehand sketch of the same in perspective. Also, any one of the three topics, — form, color and arrangement.

(b) Music. — Such elementary facts as an instructor should know in teaching singing in the schools, including major and minor keys, simple two, three, four and six part measures, the fractional divisions of the pulse or beat, the chromatic scale, the right use of the foregoing elements in practice, and the translation in musical notation of simple melodies or of time phrases sung or played.

It may be said in general, that, if the ordinary work of a good statutory high school, as defined by section 2, chapter 496 of the Acts of 1898, is well done, a student should be able to meet the requirements of these examinations.

The importance of a good record in the high school cannot be overestimated. The stronger the evidences of character, scholarship and promise, of whatever kind, he brings from his school and his teachers, especially from schools of high reputation and from teachers of good judgment and fearless expression, the greater confidence he may have in guarding himself against the contingencies of an examination and of satisfying the examiners of his fitness.

Reasonable allowance in equivalents will be made in case the candidate, for satisfactory reasons, has not taken a study named for examination.

The following approximate time allowances will indicate the brevity of the papers that may be set for examination: —

I. Languages, two hours.
II. Mathematics, two hours.
III. History and Geography, one hour.
IV. Sciences, two hours.
V. Drawing and Music, one hour.

Oral Examination.

The candidate may be questioned orally either upon some of the foregoing subjects or upon matters of common interest to him and the school, at the discretion of the examiners.

The examinations are held at the main building, beginning at 9 A.M.; and lunch should be brought each day, on account of the distance of the school from the centre of the city.

Private examinations cannot be given.

COURSES OF STUDY.

General Two Years' Course.

The general course of study for two years shall comprise the following subjects: —

Psychology, history of education, principles of education, methods of instruction and discipline, school organization, school laws of Massachusetts, methods of teaching the following subjects: —

1. English, — reading, language, rhetoric, composition, literature, history.
2. Mathematics, — arithmetic, algebra, geometry.
3. Science, — elementary physics and chemistry, geography, physiology, study of minerals, plants and animals.
4. Drawing, vocal music, physical culture, manual training.

Observation and practice in the training school, and observation in other public schools.

The above is an enumeration of the studies; their order in the course and the relative emphasis placed upon each are determined by the principal of each school, with the approval of the Visitors of that school.

It also needs to be stated that, while the foregoing list of subjects marks out the field covered in the school curriculum, it gives no adequate idea of the actual work done. It is made a special aim to seize every opportunity to give the pupils the benefit of whatever tends to fit them for the work of teaching. The spirit of this endeavor pervades the whole school. It influences the mode and character of most of the exercises, and imparts to the whole work a tone and zest difficult to describe, but which determines whatever of distinctive character the normal school possesses.

Special Course for College Graduates.

Students holding the degree of Bachelor of Arts or Bachelor of Science may, after passing the regular entrance examinations, enter at once upon a year's course in the principles and methods of teaching, to be followed by a six months' apprenticeship in the public schools of Worcester, under conditions highly favorable to the acquisition of practical skill in teaching, whether in grammar or high schools.

AIM AND SCOPE OF THE WORK.

The normal school sets for itself the task of preparing young persons for a calling which requires knowledge, both general and technical, but, in even greater measure, insight and ingenuity, and capacity for meeting small emergencies. The knowledge demanded is in great part knowledge of the material to be operated on and of the conditions and limitations under which the work must be carried on. In this respect teaching stands on about the same footing as the practice of medicine and the arts of war and navigation, where technical knowledge may hinder rather than help unless it be supplemented at every step by skill and address that come only through experience. The training in a normal school, therefore, must be practical, that is, must include some form of practice in teaching. Among the few forms of practice in vogue, that one should be adopted which aims at scope and versatility rather than precision of method; or, what is the same thing, that which is most nearly allied to experience. Preparation of lessons, which includes arrangement of the topics, questions, illustrations, etc., is of course necessary, but the attention must not be exclusively focused on this. The object to which the teacher's search-light should be directed is always the pupil, — the individual pupil here and now. As no general plans a campaign and no captain lays the course of his ship except in a manner subject to instant and even complete change, so no teacher can minutely prepare a lesson, and give it to a class as prepared, without great risk of missing opportunities for something far better and more timely. Excessive criticism, which is apt to be directed to methods rather than results, tends to the degradation of any art to the level of a trade. It easily becomes chilling and destructive rather than creative. Hence, to enlighten, to stimulate, to broaden the mind of the student; to encourage to self-dependence and readiness for the unexpected, to perseverance, to an alliance with human instincts, to reliance on the effects of time; above all, to cultivate "a lively and wakeful sense of whatever is going on," together with a sympathetic and persuasive spirit, — these, and nothing less, must be the constant aim of the practical as well as the technical instruction of the normal school. At the same time, the young teacher, in the midst of her ideals, must be guarded against a certain tendency to detach herself from her own proper nature, and assume, as an exemplar, an attitude and habit of thought somewhat above the common plane; her character and manner must be kept sincere and at the human level.

Leave of Absence. — It is often the case that, through weak health or stress of circumstances, pupils may be obliged to miss one, two, three or more terms. It is in the interest of such that the course need not be pursued uninterruptedly to the end. Students may, and often do, obtain leave of absence to teach or to rest, and resume their work afterwards. This divides but does not shorten their course of study.

GOVERNMENT.

The government of the school is not a government of rules, nor even of laws. The school is not without law, but the pupils are led by suggestion, encouragement and admonition to become a law unto themselves. That this is a statement not merely of what is thought desirable as a method of government, but what is actually accomplished, is the testimony of both official and casual visitors of the school. The pupils hardly realize that they are governed; they feel that they govern themselves.

LUNCH ROOM.

HEALTH.

Instruction in Hygiene. — A marked feature of the school is the special attention directed not only to the physical well-being of the pupils, but to such instruction as will enable them to deal practically with living questions of hygiene as they arise in every-day life. The pupils are both taught to understand the conditions of healthful life, and trained and assisted to put into practice the instruction they receive in the care of health. They have careful oversight, and are advised individually according to their needs. No pupil enters the school without furnishing a physician's certificate of good health, and no pupil is allowed to remain whose physical condition is not thought equal to the demands of the school work. Special efforts are made to counteract any tendency to overwork, over-excitement or hurry. No recitations or study periods are longer than forty minutes, and during the ample and frequent intervals of relaxation school work is completely put aside.

Recreation. — The pupils find a fund of social recreation not only in the hall, which is provided with a piano, and which is thrown open to them to enjoy themselves as they will, but in the large lunch-room used exclusively for the purpose that its name indicates. Shortly after midday the luncheons, left since the last recess in the hot closet, are brought out, and the room is soon made lively by the voices of a hundred or more pupils, seated in groups around tables filled to overflowing with the several contributions to this noonday feast. During the warmer months, however, even the lunch-room has to yield in attractiveness to the tree-shaded grounds about the building.

THE PLATFORM EXERCISE. — ORAL EXPRESSION.

This exercise consists chiefly of speaking for a few minutes, with or without notes, to the assembled school from the platform of the main hall. The range of topics is unlimited, and the choice in each case rests wholly with the student who gives the exercise. The teachers have no hand in the selection or preparation of it. It may be a personal reminiscence, a piece of interesting news, a phenomenon observed in nature, a scientific fact or law, an account of a book read or a picture seen, an observation in morals or manners, a curious object or process described and illustrated, a short literary selection read, a story told, a song sung, a piece of music played on some instrument, a blackboard drawing made on the spot, a game exhibited, a gymnastic exercise or the figure of a dance gone through, — in short, there is no limit to the range and variety of what is thus done, except the ingenuity of the student. It is not uncommon for two or more students to combine and give a connected or "team" exercise, as it is called. It will be noticed from the above enumeration — which, by the way, does not cover a tenth part of the scope which these exercises take — that the oral element is not invariably present. It is usually predominant; in every exercise, however, the student presents something to the teachers and pupils (and often visitors) before her, — something individual, characteristic, chosen and prepared by herself.

A strict limitation of time is observed, no exercise being permitted to occupy more than four, or at most five, minutes, unless interrupted by questions or prolonged by unforeseen explanations. The disciplinary value of this restriction will be evident to all teachers. It compels careful selection of telling points, forbids digression and repetition, and strongly encourages directness and precision of statement.

Constant attention is required to keep the exercise upon the colloquial plane in manner, diction and tone. The distinction between good speech and speech-making is never lost sight of. The rhetorical and oratorical must be avoided. All manifestations of mannerism and affectation, all approaches to the grandiose, are gently but firmly nipped in the bud. To this end, as well as to accustom the future teacher to what will constantly occur in the schoolroom, every discourse is open to instant interruption by any teacher, with a question or comment or suggestion; in fact, an exercise rarely goes through without some such arrest, which serves often to check the momentum that might otherwise carry the speaker into too declamatory or impassioned or otherwise unnatural a style.

But it should be added that a student on the platform is but sparingly criticised or corrected, almost never during his performance. It is held that the position in which he stands is quite trying enough, and that his inevitable agitation of mind at the moment should shield him from everything calculated to increase it. Of course, glaring errors of fact or form ought not to pass unnoticed, but the notice taken of them may be directed somewhat obliquely so as to fall upon the slip made rather than upon the person who makes it; and again, the fault may be generalized or treated as one liable to occur to anybody, not peculiar to the person who happens to have fallen into it at the time. Moreover, the form of the criticism may make it a mild warning to the listening students, who thereby seem to take a large share of the responsibility from the shoulders of the individual who has occasioned it.

The exercise is not compulsory. Every student is free to elect whether and what and when. Volunteers put their names in a book when they are ready; at the beginning of the daily exercise a sufficient number of names is read to fill the allotted time, which never exceeds forty minutes. Six or eight individuals may appear each day. The volunteering, as may be supposed, is sometimes spirited and sometimes slack, but it should be said that no student has ever passed through the school without appearing in any exercise at all.

It is quite significant that, notwithstanding its obviously trying character and the fact that a way of escape is always open, the platform exercise is and has always been one of the two or three most valued that the school offers, and its popularity with the students grows with their growing maturity throughout the three years' course, and really culminates only when the graduates look back upon the exercise in after years. Their explicit testimony to this is unequivocal and almost unanimous.

The most striking evidence that this discipline accomplishes in a good degree the purpose for which it is maintained is afforded by the fact that each class in the school shows a distinct gain in precision, ease and effectiveness of speech over the class next below it; the seniors, for example, always taking the lead, and the pupils in their first term following at a long distance behind.

THE LIBRARY AND ITS ADMINISTRATION.

A library of almost fourteen thousand volumes has been accumulated since the opening of the school in 1874, and additions to it are constantly being made. It is contained in thirty bookcases which are distributed throughout the building and are entirely open at all times, and effort is made to have the books used as freely and generally as is consistent with proper care and oversight.

While the books are chosen for their excellence, they are adapted to the class of readers for which they are designed; and the appearance of the collection indicates that the use of it is in large measure general as well as constant. The supply of dictionaries, encyclopædias and reference books of all kinds is unusually liberal, as will appear from the fact that three copies of the Century Dictionary are in constant use, and that all the numbers of Murray's Oxford Dictionary so far as issued have been bound and placed before the students. The best children's books, including collections of fables and fairy tales, are supplied, and these are much used by those students who are acting as "apprentices" in the lower grades of schools. The library is rich in the subjects of botany, natural history, anthropology and folk-lore. Such authors as Thoreau, Jefferies, Abbott, Burroughs, Torrey and Bolles, are bought and replaced more frequently, perhaps, than any other class. Volumes of poetry, travel, biography, essays and novels are always in use, the proportionate supply of each being roughly indicated by the order in which they are named. There is no official librarian, but the necessary care has been distributed among pupils and teachers in such a way as not to be burdensome to any one. One teacher puts labels into the books, numbers them, and places them on the shelves. She also has charge of the card catalogue. Another labels and puts in place the various magazines and periodicals, and keeps their record; while a third teacher by frequent inspection of the shelves makes sure that the pupils are not remiss in the work assigned them. To each pupil two or more shelves are assigned, for the care of which she is responsible, so that all the students are really librarians. Blank forms of stiff paper of uniform size are furnished, one for each shelf, on which is written a list of the books belonging to that shelf. In this list are entered, first, the number showing the position of the book on the shelf; second, the accessions number; third, the title and the author. This shelf catalogue, as it is called, stands among the books on the shelf, and always shows exactly what books should be found there and the order in which they should stand.

At the close of the school year in June each pupil is allowed to take three books from our reference library, in addition to any text-books she may want for summer use. These books are charged in the usual way; but since the organization of the school is then broken up, the slips are taken charge of by the faculty, to be redeemed at the beginning of the school year in September. Our graduates also are allowed to borrow from the library, when such borrowing does not interfere with the needs of the undergraduates.

The almost unrestricted use of the library, as here described, results, of course, in occasional loss of books, there being each year a few volumes that cannot be accounted for; but we believe this loss to be very small, comparatively speaking, considering the important advantages derived from our liberal system of administration.

APPRENTICESHIP. — PRACTICE TEACHING.

Practice-teaching with us takes the form of an apprenticeship at teaching in the public schools of the city. This may extend through a minimum period of a half-year, or be continued through a whole school year. As the city has a population of about one hundred and forty thousand, and employs over six hundred teachers in its public schools, the field thus furnished for practice is ample for all that the normal school will ever be likely to require.

There are many exercises in the school which prepare for this apprenticeship. During the first year and a half at the normal school the students in turn spend a half-day at a time in the kindergarten and in the primary school, which are maintained by the normal school for this purpose; and as these observations continue during so long a period, each student has opportunity to become well acquainted with the methods and management used in primary classes. Each week the students meet the primary and kindergarten teachers for conference on what they have seen; and the teacher of the primary classes has, in addition, classes in elementary methods with the same students.

During the first half of the second year of attendance at the normal school students are permitted, through the courtesy of the public school authorities of the city, to spend two hours a week in visiting the schools, where they see such lessons as they can best understand and profit by. These visits are arranged for beforehand with selected public school teachers, so that the students may receive the greatest benefit from them, and, as a rule, no more than a half-dozen students at a time visit any one room. They thus see the ordinary working of the school, free from any of the elements of an exhibition. The students make written reports to the normal school supervisors on their observations, and these are later discussed in class.

After this preparation and actual contact with the schools, students are ready to take an active, though strictly subordinate, part in their management; and in the latter half of their second year they serve, without pay, as apprentices to the regular teachers. Each appointment is for about six weeks of four school days each, and there are three appointments during the half-year, beginning with the primary grades and ending with the grammar grades. Thus each student acquires an intimate knowledge of the whole range of the public schools below the high school.

There is much irregular and incidental work which cannot be described, but which may be inferred from the fact that the student is really an apprentice, though serving without pay, whose time and energy are wholly at the disposal of her master, the public school teacher. The arrangement of the work of the apprentice, its character and amount, are made by the regular teacher of the school, and with these the normal school authorities never interfere; but the teachers are often glad to avail themselves of suggestions made by the supervisors from the normal school. The apprentice is urged to accept cheerfully every burden and responsibility which her teacher may be disposed to allow her to bear; and it is a noteworthy fact that this relation has been maintained without friction for more than thirty years. The apprentice frequently takes charge of the school for an hour, or even for a whole day, in the absence of the teacher. The school is divided into two sections, and the apprentice is made responsible for the instruction of one section, or she is given certain exercises which she conducts with the whole school. During any time when she is not otherwise engaged she observes the teacher in charge, and thus gains much valuable knowledge of teaching and school management. The teacher also gives her apprentice, in friendly criticism, the benefit of her own experience. This delicate office is exercised in many ways. Sometimes it is in exchanging classes with the apprentice that the teacher shows her just how the work should be done; sometimes it is by help in the preparation of lessons and lesson-plans; and not infrequently it is through direct admonition and advice.

On the part of the normal school, three of the staff, acting as supervisors, spend a considerable portion of their time in visiting apprentices, going from one school to another, and spending a longer or shorter time in each, as circumstances require. By observing teaching, examining written work, looking over lesson-plans and consulting with both apprentice and teacher, a good idea of the needs and progress of the apprentice is obtained, and suggestions and criticism are freely offered. The apprentice keeps a diary, which is given each week to the supervisor, and on Saturday the "platform exercises" are given by apprentices, the subjects being taken from their daily experience. Thus the normal school keeps constantly in touch with the apprentice, and its information as to her work is derived from so many different sources as to make it, on the whole, an accurate index of her ability and faithfulness.

On Saturday, which is a school day at the normal school, the apprentice class is in attendance, and meets there each supervisor, who makes such general criticisms, explanations and suggestions as may have interest for, and application to, the whole class. The rest of the time on Saturday the apprentice spends in preparing for her work, — consulting books and teachers, gathering material, and, what is considered of great value, comparing notes and exchanging views with her classmates. This intercourse with each other brings the experience of the whole class before every member, and methods, devices and expedients are passed through a sort of clearing-house, where each may select what seems to her of value.

It should be said that the teachers to whom apprentices are assigned feel both the honor and the responsibility of their position. They make careful plans in advance, and are constantly on the watch for any change which may benefit their apprentices. It has been the almost invariable experience during the twenty-five years and more that this plan has been in operation, that the apprentices have been given every opportunity to perfect themselves in their art, and that the teachers have exercised an unusual amount of care, discretion, patience and friendliness toward their charges. Without such active and sympathetic co-operation it would be well-nigh impossible to carry on the work.

In addition to the regular apprenticeship outlined above, there is provided for those students who show more than usual ability, faithfulness, and especially power of growth, an additional half-year of practice on the same general plan as the first. A higher standard of attainment is now required of them in every way, and the effort is made to cultivate in them the highest professional spirit and attitude. It is intended that the advanced apprenticeship shall have the same relation to the regular course that the course for the doctorate bears to that leading to the bachelor's degree.

For those students who possess the requisite maturity and scholarship, assignments as apprentices in any of the three high schools of the city are made, where they are given such part in the instruction as they are able to undertake, and where they may receive training and practice not afforded by grammar schools. This enables the normal school authorities to offer a special course of a year and a half for college graduates, — a year of professional study and a half-year of apprenticeship, — with the entire school system of the city at their disposal.

In addition to the facilities for practice already described, the normal school has valuable privileges in two special schools, — at the Washburn Memorial Hospital and at the Worcester County Training School in Oakdale, a few miles from the city. At the Memorial Hospital there are often children who are detained there during convalescence, or who are undergoing long courses of treatment which would not interfere with their power of doing some kinds of school work if the conditions were properly controlled. To give these children some intellectual occupation and interest is, indeed, sometimes, to assist in their cure. For such the authorities at the hospital have arranged a schoolroom, and the normal school sends regularly two experienced apprentices, who conduct classes and give individual instruction. Since the children are of all ages and stages of advancement, the school becomes of necessity an ungraded one, and from its very nature presents exceptional conditions and children. The apprentice therefore receives training in a direction not permitted by her other work, and resource, adaptability, tact and teaching skill are developed in a way that supplements the regular training.

At the Training School the apprentice is received on the same terms as in the public schools of the city. She is under the direction of the superintendent and in the immediate charge of the teacher employed there. The difference, as may be inferred, is in having a class of boys to deal with who are exceptional in many ways. The experience of the apprentice in this school gives her good training in the exercise of her art, and special training in the management of a class of exceptional pupils, representatives of which are to be found in nearly every school, where, owing often to lack of skill on the part of the teacher, they give a disproportionate amount of trouble. They are always a source of anxiety to the inexperienced teacher, but having become familiar with them during her apprenticeship, she no longer fears them, and she has now considerable command of methods for dealing with them. It is unfortunately impossible for all the apprentices to have practice in both these special schools; but a large number do have, and in this, as in other cases, selection is made of those who will be most likely to benefit by the kind of work offered.

In addition to the books in the reference library of the normal school, which are lent to the apprentices on the same terms as to the other pupils, there is a large and constantly increasing collection of material which is especially for the use of the apprentices. This comprises: (a) a special line of books useful in teaching, such as books on methods and devices, supplementary readers, collections of fairy tales and fables, historical stories, books on nature and nature study, and collections of music suitable for teaching rote-songs; (b) several hundred wall charts, illustrating natural history, the natural sciences, arts and manufactures, geography and methods of teaching such subjects as reading, writing and drawing; (c) about seven hundred pictures of birds and animals of all countries, mounted on cards, and large enough to be seen by a whole class; (d) collections of native animals, birds, insects, plants, woods, minerals, rocks, fossils and local manufactures; (e) maps, including political, topographical, relief models, outline blackboard stencils, outline maps on blackboard cloth, historical maps to illustrate the periods of discovery and of territorial growth, maps of campaigns and battles, and many others of special nature; (f) a collection of pictures of places of historic interest, of portraits of celebrated men and women, of types of fine architecture, painting and sculpture. Besides these collections, the school owns three duplicating machines, which the pupils are taught to use, which enables the apprentices to print any number of copies of maps, drawings or notes on any subject of study, for the use of their pupils. All these things are made available by a card catalogue; the apprentices take them to their schools and keep them as long as they are of use; and the fact that they are used is shown by the number each year condemned as worn out and replaced by new ones. The employment of illustrative material by the apprentices is encouraged, in order to enrich their teaching, to enable them to try the various aids to instruction, and to accustom them to variety in their methods of teaching. They become acquainted with the advantages and perils attending the use of such things, and learn what best suits their own methods of teaching. Their apprenticeship affords so much practice that they are able to develop what gives promise of succeeding, and to reject that which they have been unable to use to advantage. They thus in a measure anticipate a process which consumes much of the time and energy of a young teacher who has had no such training. They are led to use a method of "trial and error" which later may help to prevent their falling into grooves and ruts, and assist in their professional growth.

Individual pupils, who find it impossible or impracticable to take the apprenticeship, enjoy all the other advantages of the school, with this single exception. It should be said, however, that no person receives the diploma of the school without having given in the schoolroom clear evidence of ability to teach. Unless they have had a considerable experience in teaching before coming to the normal school, students usually take the apprenticeship, and the advanced apprenticeship also, if they are allowed to do so. Not infrequently a student attends the normal school for a year and a half, and then obtains a leave of absence for a year to teach. If she succeeds as a teacher, she may return to the normal school for a half-year and graduate; but in such a case she is not ranked as having received the training of the apprenticeship.

CHILD-STUDY. — OBSERVATION OF CHILDREN.

The school is much indebted to Dr. G. Stanley Hall for a suggestion, made as long ago as 1884, that the study of psychology might be pursued in part by original observation of children. From his idea as a starting point, a scheme for this purpose has been worked out and adopted as a permanent part of the school curriculum. The Pedagogical Seminary, Vol. 1, No. 2, contains an article by Dr. W. H. Burnham, in which is found this estimate: "As a means of bringing the young teacher into relations of interest and sympathy with children, this work can hardly be commended too highly."

What is this plan? At the outset it may be well to make plain what it is not.

1. We do not use our pupils to gather material to illustrate or develop some line of investigation of our own, or of any specialist.

2. We do not make it a class exercise.

3. It is not assigned, and there are individuals who never pass in a record. Its importance is dwelt on, and most of the few laggards are stimulated to do something; but only because it is "in the air."

What it is. — An attempt to cultivate the habit of sympathetic observation of children, in the belief that having to do with a child is a sure and safe way to bring out the latent and uncritical abilities of the brevet teacher. And this faith is justified. The greater part find a pleasure in telling the story, and a fair number become deeply interested in the occupation. Again and again we are surprised by finding how few of our pupils belong to families in which there are little children; and it is clearly manifest that this work awakens curiosity concerning the phenomena of child-nature, excites intelligent sympathy with children, and contributes to skill in discipline and instruction. Graduates and apprentices give abundant testimony on all these points. When the nature of the work is explained to the school, great emphasis is placed upon the necessity of having the records genuine beyond all possibility of question; of having them consist of a simple, concise statement of what the child does or says, without comment by the writer; of making both the observation and the record without the knowledge of the child; and of noting the usual, rather than the unusual, conduct of the individuals observed. It is profitable to learn how multiform is this usual conduct. In order that the field shall be wide, we take care to lay no preponderance on any line of observation, though, for convenience in classification, blanks of seven colors are provided for the records. White paper is used for such observations as students make themselves; red for well-attested ones reported by others; yellow for reminiscences of their own childhood; canary for language; green for mention of whatever they read on the subject; blue for exceptional or defective children; and chocolate for observations that extend continuously over a definite period of time. Of these, green is rarely used, blue and chocolate seldom, yellow and canary often, and white more than all others combined. Each blank has the following heading: —

From the records passed in a few are selected from time to time, and placed where they may be read by all who care for them. How far these serve as stimulus and example is not known; but every day, not excepting the first day of the term, brings its supply of records, even though the subject may not have been explicitly mentioned for months. It is indeed the most nearly self-sustaining exercise in the school. To such as ask are issued blank books in which to enter serial records of the same child, — a sort of diary; and these are taken as a rule by pupils with greatest or exceptional opportunities.

Systematic instruction in psychology is aided, both in the way of preparation and supplement, by this additional study. Pupils are thus furnished at the outset with facts of their own observation, which serve as elementary material for scientific classification and study; they have a habit of observing certain classes of phenomena, and have received suggestions and cautions that are of service to them in other departments; they are able to pass more easily to mental science, because they have learned that that, as well as natural science, can be pursued by an objective method; they have an already awakened and active interest in the subject, that gives them pleasure in learning general principles, sometimes in part known by their own observations; and, moreover, they attach a different value to a text-book, which they see is a natural outgrowth of an experience like their own.

As all students are free to make observations, some records have no value apart from the wholesome endeavor that made them; but a progress in the significance of the things noticed and in the manner of recording them is apparent. During the latter part of a term the proportion of significant and valuable papers is greater than during the first part. All papers are carefully preserved, and it is hoped that they may be of value to students of child-nature; but the primary object of collecting them is the training of prospective teachers, and so highly does the work commend itself as a means to this end, that, if nothing ulterior to this is gained, complete satisfaction and no disappointment will be experienced.

Those who may desire a fuller exposition of the method and its results are referred to The Pedagogical Seminary (Clark University), Vol. I., No. 2, and Vol II., No. 3; The Educational Review for December, 1893; also, the volume published under the auspices of our Graduates' Association, entitled Child Observations. First Series: Imitation and Allied Activities. Boston: D. C. Heath & Co.; Educational Review for May, 1898.

CHILDREN'S CLASSES.

Kindergarten.

The kindergarten occupies a beautiful and sunny suite of rooms in the south-west corner of the ground floor, and is the object of great attraction and interest on the part of students and teachers. It is made serviceable to our pupils for purposes of daily observation and study, but not for practice. The class affords excellent opportunities for certain lines of child-study and for experimentation in elementary teaching and the care and management of young children; and it exhibits to our students the earliest forms and phases of the work which they are to undertake in its next stage.

The sessions are held from 9 till 12 every week-day except Monday, with holidays and vacations coinciding with those of the normal school.

Only children between three and five years old, who are in good health and who have been vaccinated, are received.

No charge is made for tuition, and no obligation to follow any regular course of instruction or training is assumed.

The presence of visitors (except the parents of the children) was found to interfere seriously with the work of the class, and we were therefore reluctantly compelled to except this class from general visitation.

Primary Class.

As following the kindergarten, there has been established three years' instruction for older children.

The conditions of admission to this class are substantially the same as those enumerated above for the kindergarten, except that children must in all cases be past their fifth and not past their seventh birthday when admitted.

The class, like the kindergarten, is used for observation and experiment, but not for practice teaching.

Children may be promoted to this class from the kindergarten, or they may enter without any previous schooling whatever.

The sessions are the same as those of the kindergarten.

Application for admission must be made beforehand and the child personally brought to the principal for registration.

GENERAL FACILITIES.

Incidental Advantages. — Important facilities for general improvement are offered to pupils in the libraries, institutions and other means of culture in which Worcester is rich.

The extensive and well-arranged museum of the Worcester Natural History Society is open for inspection, and specimens in all departments can be borrowed by teachers and students, and taken to the school for purposes of study and illustration.

The hall of the American Antiquarian Society contains a notably rich store of interesting exhibits, and the library includes a rare treasury of books pertaining to American history.

The free public library stands high among the institutions of the kind in this country, for the effective relationship existing between it and the schools. Its large and well-endowed reference library, its well-filled circulating department, its reading rooms, supplied with the leading domestic and foreign papers and periodicals, afford exceptional opportunities to the schools. Special facilities are offered to teachers and pupils, and the librarian is unsparing in his efforts to render every aid in the choice and use of books or in any way in which he can assist the reader.

The Worcester Art Museum is now to be added to the foregoing list.

Railroad Fares. — The many lines of railroad and trolley cars centering in Worcester afford easy communication with the neighboring towns and villages. Season tickets or mileage

tickets are issued by the railroads to pupils of the normal school at greatly reduced rates, and the daily sessions of the school are so arranged as to accommodate those who wish to come and go by the cars.

GENERAL INFORMATION.

Board and Rooms. — Students are advised to board in the city if possible. Not much is saved pecuniarily by those who go in and out every day by rail, and the loss of time and the incidental exposure put them at a serious disadvantage.

affords furnished rooms — it is not a boarding-house but a dormitory — for about twenty students and teachers. Those who lodge here find table board in families near at hand. The terms are $38 for the school year, and no deduction is made for temporary absence. No student is received for less than a half-term. Further particulars may be obtained from the principal, to whom early application for rooms should be made.

Other boarding places in respectable private families in the neighborhood, approved by the authorities of the institution, may be obtained. To such as seek information or advice in this direction the principal is ready to give every assistance in his power.

The average cost of board in families (generally including fuel, light and washing) has been ascertained to be $4 to $4.50 per week.

Incidental Expenses. — The necessary incidental or miscellaneous expenses have averaged about $5 for each pupil for the term, or $10 a year.

These averages imply strict economy on the part of pupils, and in making an estimate of expenses it would probably be unsafe to go below the above figures.

STATE AID.

The Commonwealth has regularly appropriated several hundred dollars a year to each of its normal schools, to be divided among such pupils as are most needy and deserving. This school of course receives its proper share of such funds, and is able to render assistance to a number of students each year. Aid is not furnished during the first term of attendance. Applications for this aid are to be made to the principal, in writing, and must be accompanied by such evidence as shall satisfy him that the applicant needs the aid.

The State also gives the use of all the text-books required in the course, as well as free access to an ample and well-selected library of reference and general literature.

NORMAL SCHOOL SCHOLARSHIPS AT HARVARD.

There are four scholarships in the scientific school of Harvard University for the benefit of graduates of the State normal schools. The annual value of each of these scholarships is $150, which is the price of tuition, so that the holder of the scholarship gets his tuition free.

The incumbents are originally appointed for one year, on the recommendation of the principals of the schools from which they have been severally graduated. These appointments may be annually renewed, on the recommendation of the faculty of the scientific school.

TO SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS.

Every year in the months of April and May our senior class is approaching the time of its graduation in June. The class usually includes from forty to fifty members, mostly young women, about twenty-two years of age. These students, after having graduated from high school, have spent three years in special study and practice, under our instruction and supervision, to fit themselves for teachers in the public schools of this Commonwealth. Every one of them has given, in the school-room, good evidence of ability to teach. Their apprenticeship in carefully selected public schools of this city has afforded opportunity not only to acquire good methods of teaching, but also to gain considerable command of the art of school management and discipline. They are therefore capable of taking at once positions of some responsibility. Of course there are differences among them, — differences in native ability, in scholarly acquirements and in aptitude for special kinds of service.

Superintendents in search of teachers like to see candidates and talk with them, and candidates on their part like to learn something about the positions they are asked to take. So it has come about that an increasing number of superintendents visit us during the months above named, and have personal interviews with members of the senior class with reference to probable vacancies to occur in the autumn. We are always ready to afford opportunity for such interviews, as well as to furnish any information that may help to make engagements mutually advantageous. Thus it happens that a certain proportion of our most promising seniors are engaged to teach before graduation day arrives, and during the ensuing summer are making more or less preparation for their work.

We also keep a record of such graduates of former years as may for any reason desire a change of work or of location, with particulars as to their experience and standing, so that we are able at any time to suggest eligible candidates for a great variety of positions.

Of course no charge is made for this service to either party, and we cordially invite correspondence or personal consultation from superintendents, principals, parents, or any who may wish help in securing good teachers.

TO VISITORS.

A hearty invitation is extended to the parents and friends of pupils — to all, in fact, who may feel inclined — to visit the school, and see the current and method of its daily working.

The first two and last two weeks of a term are, obviously, the least favorable times for a visit.

The school is not in session on Mondays. On other days the hours (leaving out the noon recess) are from nine o'clock to four, an arrangement that has been found the most convenient for ninety-six per cent. of the pupils.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

GRADUATES. 1876–1908.

[The figures give the ordinal number of the class, C. S. meaning certificated or special student. Graduates whose names are marked with (A) have, besides passing through the regular two years' course of study, served with full approbation for not less than a half year as apprentices in the public schools of the city of Worcester. Those marked (AA) have thus served for not less than a whole year, and are called advanced apprentices.]

☞ When any change of name or residence has been reported it is indicated immediately under the name and residence at the time of graduation. Graduates will see that it is very desirable to have notice of such changes promptly sent to the principal.

CLASS REUNIONS.

A prominent feature of this school is the frequency and regularity of the class gatherings that are held, and the special provision made here for their accommodation. The graduates maintain an active Graduates' Association, embracing practically all (now somewhat more than twelve hundred) who hold the diploma of the school, and their annual meeting in June never fails to bring together large numbers.

But this, though an occasion of great and unflagging interest, does not furnish sufficient opportunity for the social intercourse of classmates, or the expression of class spirit. So it has come about that a series of class reunions goes on throughout the entire year, making a distinctive feature of graduate life, and at the same time quickening the current of the school.

A suite of rooms in the main school building, consisting of a large reception-room, with dining-room and kitchen adjoining, has been set apart for this purpose, and the graduates have fitted up and furnished them to serve as club rooms for the Association. They are never used except by the graduates, who are urged to feel entirely at home in them. Each class as it comes to the tenth anniversary of its graduation celebrates the occasion by a gift to these rooms, which in this way have been attractively furnished. Thus each graduate feels a personal and vital interest in the rooms she has helped to furnish and beautify.

By previous arrangement of dates, every Saturday afternoon throughout the school year sees a gathering of graduates in these rooms, composed sometimes of a single class, more often of two or more classes, the members of which were pupils in the school at the same time. Saturday is a holiday with those who are teaching in the public schools, but is a regular school day with us; so the reunion includes a visit to alma mater, with the opportunity to exchange greetings with the faculty, and to see the school. A constant feature of these occasions, and one which never lacks appreciation, is a supper prepared by a committee from the class appointed for that purpose at the preceding reunion. While this repast or some part of it may be ordered from a caterer, it is often prepared largely in the graduates' kitchen, and is always served in their own dining-room, which has a complete service of china, silverware and napery. Then follows an evening of social intercourse, which, in the case of the younger classes, often ends with dancing in the gymnasium. In this pleasant way the graduates keep in touch with the school, which they come to regard as a second home, feeling that a warm welcome always awaits them here; while at the same time their visits furnish the undergraduates with a constant object-lesson in friendly attachment to each other and loyalty to the school.

CIRCULAR OF INFORMATION.

AIM AND PURPOSE OF THE SCHOOL.

The Board of Education, by a vote passed May 6, 1880, stated the design of the school and the course of studies for the State normal schools as follows: —

The design of the normal school is strictly professional; that is, to prepare in the best possible manner the pupils for the work of organizing, governing and teaching the public schools of the Commonwealth.

To this end there must be the most thorough knowledge: first, of the branches of learning required to be taught in the schools; second, of the best methods of teaching these branches; and third, of right mental training.

CONDITIONS OF ADMISSION.

Candidates for admission to any one of the normal schools must have attained the age of seventeen years complete if young men, and sixteen years if young women, and must have shown upon physical examination that they are free from any disease or infirmity which would unfit them for the office of teacher.

They must present a certificate of good moral character, give evidence of good intellectual capacity, be graduates of a high school whose courses of study have been approved by the Board of Education, or they must have received, to the satisfaction of the principal of the school, the equivalent of a good high school education. Candidates must also declare their intention to complete the course of study in the school and afterwards to teach in the public schools of Massachusetts.

Tuition is free to residents of Massachusetts, but each non-resident pupil is required to pay a tuition fee of $25 at the beginning of each half-yearly session.

MAIN HALL—EAST END.

THE EXAMINATION.

IMPORTANT NOTICE. — Special attention is invited to the following vote of the State Board of Education, passed on May 2, 1907: —

Candidates from high schools which are on the certificate list of the New England College Entrance Examination Board may be admitted to any of the State normal schools without examination in any subject required for admission in which they have attained a standing of B, or 80 per cent., as certified by the principal of the school.

The examination will embrace the following groups: —

I. Languages. — (a) English, with its grammar and literature, and (b) either Latin or French.

II. Mathematics. — (a) The elements of algebra and (b) the elements of plane geometry.

III. History and Geography. — The history and civil government of Massachusetts and the United States, with related geography and so much of English history as is directly contributory to a knowledge of United States history.

IV. Sciences. — (a) Physiology and hygiene, and (b and c) any two of the following: physics, chemistry, physical geography and botany, provided one of the two selected is either physics or chemistry.

V. Drawing and Music. — (a) Elementary, mechanical and free-hand drawing, with any one of the topics, — form, color and arrangement; and (b) musical notation, with ability to sing, if practicable.

I. — LANGUAGES.

(a) ENGLISH. — The subjects of the examination will be the same as those generally agreed upon by the colleges and high technical schools of New England.

The books for study in 1910 are: Shakespeare's Macbeth; Milton's L'Allegro; Burke's Speech on Conciliation with America, or Washington's Farewell Address and Webster's First Bunker Hill Oration; Macaulay's Life of Johnson, or Carlyle's Essay on Burns.

The purpose of the examination is to discover, (1) whether the student has acquired a good habit of study, (2) whether he has formed any standards of literary judgment, (3) whether he has become discerning of literary merit, and (4) what acquaintance he has with standard English and American writers.

The examination will take such a form that students who have followed other than the prescribed lines of reading may be able to satisfy the examiners on the above points.

In addition, the candidate may be required to answer questions involving the essentials of English grammar, and questions on the leading facts in those periods of English literary history to which the prescribed works belong.

(b) One only of the two languages, Latin and French. The translation at sight of simple prose, with questions on the usual forms and ordinary constructions of the language.

II. — Mathematics.

(a) The elements of algebra through affected quadratic equations.

(b) The elements of plane geometry, including original work, both with theorems and problems.

III. — United States History.

The examination calls for a knowledge of the history and civil government of Massachusetts and the United States, with related geography and so much of English history as is directly contributory to a knowledge of United States history.

IV. — Sciences.

(a) Physiology and Hygiene. — The elementary facts of anatomy, the general functions of the various organs, the more obvious rules of health, and the effects of alcoholic drinks, narcotics and stimulants upon those addicted to their use.

(b) and (c) Any two of the following sciences, — physics, chemistry, botany, physical geography, — provided one of the two is either physics or chemistry. The elementary principles of these subjects, so far as they may be presented in the courses usually devoted to them in good high schools.

V. — Drawing and Music.

(a) Drawing. — Mechanical and freehand drawing, enough to enable the candidate to draw a simple object, like a box or a pyramid or a cylinder, with plan and elevation to scale, and to make a freehand sketch of the same in perspective. Also, any one of the three topics, — form, color and arrangement.

(b) Music. — Such elementary facts as an instructor should know in teaching singing in the schools, including major and minor keys, simple two, three, four and six part measures, the fractional divisions of the pulse or beat, the chromatic scale, the right use of the foregoing elements in practice, and the translation in musical notation of simple melodies or of time phrases sung or played.

It may be said in general, that, if the ordinary work of a good statutory high school, as defined by section 2, chapter 496 of the Acts of 1898, is well done, a student should be able to meet the requirements of these examinations.

The importance of a good record in the high school cannot be overestimated. The stronger the evidences of character, scholarship and promise, of whatever kind, he brings from his school and his teachers, especially from schools of high reputation and from teachers of good judgment and fearless expression, the greater confidence he may have in guarding himself against the contingencies of an examination and of satisfying the examiners of his fitness.

Reasonable allowance in equivalents will be made in case the candidate, for satisfactory reasons, has not taken a study named for examination.

The following approximate time allowances will indicate the brevity of the papers that may be set for examination: —

I. Languages, two hours.
II. Mathematics, two hours.
III. History and Geography, one hour.
IV. Sciences, two hours.
V. Drawing and Music, one hour.

Oral Examination.

The candidate may be questioned orally either upon some of the foregoing subjects or upon matters of common interest to him and the school, at the discretion of the examiners.

The examinations are held at the main building, beginning at 9 A.M.;

and lunch should be brought each day, on account of the distance of the school from the centre of the city.

Private examinations cannot be given.

COURSES OF STUDY.

General Two Years' Course.

The general course of study for two years shall comprise the following subjects: —

Psychology, history of education, principles of education, methods of instruction and discipline, school organization, school laws of Massachusetts, methods of teaching the following subjects: —

1. English, — reading, language, rhetoric, composition, literature, history.
2. Mathematics, — arithmetic, algebra, geometry.
3. Science, — elementary physics and chemistry, geography, physiology, study of minerals, plants and animals.
4. Drawing, vocal music, physical culture, manual training.

Observation and practice in the training school, and observation in other public schools.

The above is an enumeration of the studies; their order in the course and the relative emphasis placed upon each are determined by the principal of each school, with the approval of the Commissioner of Education.

It also needs to be stated that, while the foregoing list of subjects marks out the field covered in the school curriculum, it gives no adequate idea of the actual work done. It is made a special aim to seize every opportunity to give the pupils the benefit of whatever tends to fit them for the work of teaching. The spirit of this endeavor pervades the whole school. It influences the mode and character of most of the exercises, and imparts to the whole work a tone and zest difficult to describe, but which determines whatever of distinctive character the normal school possesses.

Special Course for College Graduates.

Students holding the degree of Bachelor of Arts or Bachelor of Science may, after passing the regular entrance examinations, enter at once upon a year's course in the principles and methods of teaching, to be followed by a six months' apprenticeship in the public schools of Worcester, under conditions highly favorable to the acquisition of practical skill in teaching, whether in grammar or high schools.

Kindergarten Course.

The school now offers for the first time an opportunity for those who desire to prepare themselves as kindergarten teachers. The requirements for admission are the same as for the general course, and in addition ability to sing and play. The course includes, in the first year, the professional studies of the junior class, English, drawing and music; the second year is mainly devoted to actual teaching and to study of the theory and practice of the kindergarten.

Educational Psychology.

The work of this course centers on the learning process. The fundamental mental processes — sensation, perception, apperception, habit, imagination, memory, attention, interest, conception, feeling, reason and will — are studied inductively, with the purpose of discovering some of the difficulties of the learner and how those difficulties may be most effectively overcome. On the basis of this knowledge, certain principles of teaching are formulated. While Thorndike's "Elements of Psychology" or some other elementary treatise is used as a text-book, students are required to read only selected parts, which would seem to be of service in interpreting and applying educational principles. Experiments made in the class room or outside of the schoolroom usually serve as an introduction to the study of each phase of psychology. Every student is required to form a new habit and to report on this to the class. The art of study is considered briefly.

Child Psychology.

Educational psychology is a prerequisite to the study of child psychology. A systematic study of the child is made in the light of the doctrine of evolution. The course aims primarily to cultivate an intelligent interest in child life, so that the student may enter into a more sympathetic relation with children and be better able to deal successfully with the problems of school work. The chief emphasis of the course is laid on the development of the human instincts and interests, and on the methods of controlling and modifying them in conformity to educational needs. The relation of the health of the child and of hygienic home and school surroundings to mental development is frequently pointed out. Both normal and abnormal types of children are studied. A text-book is used as an outline, but every student is expected to make original observations of children on blanks that are prepared for the purpose. These observations are used as illustrative material in the class work. Reference is frequently made to studies on animals and on individual children and groups of children.

Advanced Educational Psychology.

This course presupposes educational psychology, child psychology, hygiene and successful teaching experience as an apprentice. Some selected field of child psychology will be studied. The character and scope of the work pursued varies from year to year according to the instruction given in the previous courses in psychology and hygiene, and according to the needs of individual classes.

Pedagogy.

Principles of Education. — This course is properly preceded by some experience in teaching, which makes it possible to develop principles from the analysis of actual problems presented by the classroom. It includes the study of instincts and capacities, apperception, interests, individual differences, attention, principles of association, moral training, reasoning and motor education. Through the constant study of cases, power is developed to apply psychology to the practical problems of instruction.

School Management. — In this subject students make an exhaustive study of the art of teaching, relating it to the principles of education and the underlying psychology. All matters of routine are discussed, and a strong emphasis is put upon the problems of attention and the technique of instruction.

A careful study is made of the school laws of the State of Massachusetts.

History of Education.

This course aims to give the pupils an acquaintance and sympathy with the great educational reformers and their work. It also emphasizes the fact that education and its results have always depended upon the conditions of the times and the environment of the people. Through this study there should come to the pupil a more exalted ideal of his work and an intelligent appreciation of current pedagogical discussion.

Chemistry.

With the modern awakening on the subject of hygiene, the practical teachings of chemistry in relation to the conduct of life become of vital importance to every teacher. A knowledge of the fundamental truths of sanitary chemistry is now required for safely conducting even a district school.

In treating of the hygienic chemistry of air, water and food, a series of topics is considered, vitally connected with the hygiene of the school and the home. The atmosphere, its composition, properties, contamination and examination, leads up to a study of heating, ventilation, the problems of schoolroom air, lighting and fuels. Dust and micro-organisms, their detection and removal, are treated of in a way bearing directly on the management of schools. Water and water supplies, sewage and household waste are examined from the same point of view.

The subject of food, its composition, adulteration and the relative values of food materials, forms another division of the work quite as important for the teacher, since nutrition plays an important part in the condition of the child. A study of dietaries and the food values which may be obtained for a given sum expended in various ways gives an intelligent application of the facts previously considered, and a useful knowledge of some of the laws of right living.

Geography.

The geography work proper is prefaced by a course of a half-year in physiography, which has for its object the study of the simpler and commoner physiographic forms on which the life of the globe finds its habitation, of the conditions and changes in the atmosphere which affect this life, and, briefly, of the ocean as a factor in this organic life. The subject is taught largely from the standpoint of the teacher of geography, who must know forms and conditions of physiography in order to understand and properly classify the responses which the life elements make.

The work in geography proper has a double object, — to enlarge the horizon of the pupils and to discuss typical illustrative processes in the presentation of the subject. When it is considered that in most cases the pupils entering the normal school have not studied geography for five years, the need of teaching geography as such is apparent. The professional portion of the work, that of preparing the pupils for their teaching experience, occupies the larger amount of the time devoted to the study.

The department has maintained for two years a Saturday course of lectures in geography for teachers. Last year an average attendance of 50 and this year of 90 was recorded. The lectures discussed the basal features of geography, and, in addition, presented types of lessons in various portions of the subject.

Physics.

The course in physics follows to a large extent the syllabus in the subject published by the city of New York for the elementary schools. The design of the course is to prepare the students to teach the fundamental principles of physics, and to illustrate by simple experiments with inexpensive apparatus some of the phenomena. The choice of subject-matter rests largely on the every-day experience, and each topic is illustrated by application of the principles within the range of observation of the pupils.

The topics discussed fall under the following headings: gravity, including the pendulum; mechanical powers; mechanics of liquids; mechanics of gases; sound; heat; light; magnetism; electricity.

An important part of the work is the construction of apparatus from available, though perhaps crude material, designed for use in the schools.

Botany.

The course in plant study occupies a year, and while there is very little technical botany, emphasis is laid on such phases of the subject as are best adapted for the students to present to their own schools later. For several reasons the tree has been chosen as the chief feature of the work; it is the largest and altogether the most impressive plant form; it is the only one we have before us at all seasons, and it is by far the most available for plant lessons in city schools. As much as possible the work is done outdoors.

In the autumn acquaintance is begun. A collection is made of the leaves of all the native and many of the foreign trees, varying from sixty to a hundred species. These are carefully mounted on sheets which bear the common and botanical names and the location of the tree. The sheets are arranged in covers in their botanical sequence, and by this means some knowledge of plant relations is imparted. Since each pupil collects her own specimens the rudiments of plant ecology are learned from observations of the localities where the trees grow.

Blue prints, ink prints, drawings and leaves cut from colored paper assist in familiarizing the student with the different forms. Shape, surface, margin, texture, are fixed in the mind, and the structure and function of the leaf thoroughly learned. Autumn color is observed, displayed and discussed.

Seed dissemination is taught from the winged seeds, such as the ash and maple, the pulpy fruits, such as the apple and cherry, and the explosive seed vessels of the witch hazel. At Christmas time the attention is directed to the evergreen trees and the peculiarities that distinguish them from the deciduous group. The different species are learned by their needles and their cones.

Winter furnishes opportunity for a more intimate acquaintance with the trees through other features than their leaves. By constant observation outdoors, and reports and discussions indoors, the bark, the shape, the method of branching, the color, size and position of buds and leaf scars, — all that goes to make the individual "expression" of the tree, — are gradually learned.

This is followed by a study of the characteristic markings of the various woods. The work of the stem and the structure that makes that work possible are studied at this time. Throughout the course the principles of forestry and the great need of its practice in our country are dwelt upon.

In February a complete collection of tree twigs is put in water, and the gradual unfolding of leaves and flowers is observed. The various forms of vernation are drawn and described.

The earliest flowers of spring are found on our forest trees in the form of catkins, and the simplicity of their structure and the very palpable distribution of pollen make the work of the blossom easily taught. Later, through the blossoms of the fruit trees, the work of insects in pollination may be seen.

The School Garden.

In furtherance of the courses in nature study and manual training the pupils maintain a school garden. Although the area is not large, yet by division of labor every pupil comes to have some first-hand knowledge of plants and some skill in caring for them.

They raise the common vegetables and flowers, — the things they will find best adapted for the gardens they will some day supervise as teachers. Their attention is directed to the possibilities of gardening even in the thickly settled portions of the city, and they are encouraged to plant seeds at home.

During the winter months window boxes in the various rooms of the school building furnish opportunity for indoor gardening.

Hygiene.

This course aims to put the student in possession of the elementary and fundamental facts of anatomy and physiology so that a comprehension and appreciation of hygiene will naturally follow. A knowledge of the minute details of anatomy and the memorizing of many technical terms is not expected. Emphasis is placed on a knowledge of the functions of the different parts of the body, and on the importance of the inter-relation and inter-dependence of these functional parts for the healthful activity of the body as a whole. Such knowledge lays the basis for an orderly and intelligent grasp of the facts relating to the care of the body. The salient features of personal hygiene and school hygiene are considered and some reference is made to social hygiene. The physical life of the child is regarded as a subject of great importance. Under this subject such topics as growth, ventilation, food, fatigue, eyestrain, dental hygiene, adenoids, disease, etc., are studied in relation to the physical and mental development of the school child. Some instruction is given relative to the aims and methods of teaching hygiene in the public schools.

Hough & Sedgwick's "The Human Mechanism" and Shaw's "School Hygiene" are used as text-books. This work is supplemented by reports, lectures and reference reading. The school reading room is well supplied with the best periodicals devoted to various phases of hygiene and the class room is well provided with reference books. A manikin, a human skeleton, charts and anatomical models are frequently used for class demonstrations.

Nature Study.

The nature study of the school has for its purpose the development in pupils — a majority of whom were brought up in the city — of such affectionate relations with nature that all her manifestations will be of interest. In the study of plants, of birds, of insects, of water life, this purpose is kept in mind. An outdoor lesson on the winter trees, a moonlight walk, an early morning outing for birds, a picnic in the woods, an excursion on the water, work in the garden, are all made tributary to this end. For stimulus constant reference is made to the literature of nature, in which the library of the school is rich.

Mineralogy.

The course this past year began with the study of crystals, each pupil having a typical set representing the systems of crystallization and simple goniometers for measuring angles. The physical properties of the various forms of quartz were studied in a similar manner, and written reports on all specimens were made. With this introduction, simple blowpipe analysis and the chemical examination of minerals were taken up, leading to the systematic determination of a considerable number of specimens, representing most of the great groups. Minerals of special interest or of economic importance were discussed in lectures, and the school's large collection of specimens, both for exhibition and for working purposes, has been freely used for comparison and illustration. Thus the course included a considerable fund of knowledge of natural resources in a science closely related to the practical arts.

Language.

Reading. — Reading is taught as a matter of interpretation and expression. Considerable time is given to methods of teaching reading in the elementary school and to story telling as it will be practiced in the primary school.

Grammar. — The course gives a thorough review of the essentials of the subject, and discusses the principles underlying, as well as the problems connected with methods in the schoolroom.

English Composition. — The instruction in this subject grows logically out of the adaptation, in both oral and written expression, of plan to a definitely conceived purpose. When purpose and plan are recognized as fundamental in composition, the preparation of outlines in any form of discourse — narration, description, exposition, comparison and contrast, and argumentation — readily follows. Methods of teaching composition in the elementary schools are given consideration.

LITERATURE. — This course develops a broad and sympathetic knowledge of the literature of children of the grammar school age, and includes drill, and discussion of methods of teaching it. It also includes the cultural study of great masterpieces of American and English literature.

History.

The aim of the course is to train successful teachers of history for the graded schools. To secure this general aim it is necessary to make plain to prospective teachers the need of several supplementary aims, such as these: —

To realize certain traits and abilities of children at successive stages of growth, and the need of educating and training them for living together in citizenship.

To see more truly what history is in the public schools for, and what it is capable of doing there grade by grade in the hands of the capable teacher.

To understand the true nature of history, its spirit of truthfulness, its laws of relation, etc.

To acquire larger knowledge of history and its interpretation.

To become familiar with the best and latest principles and methods as expressed in grouping and grading of courses of study, and in the arrangement of material in lesson plans.

To get by observation and practice confirmation of the strong and weak points in teaching.

These aims have place in the following abbreviated program: —

First Term. — The aims of history teaching in general; the story telling as a method in lower grade work, including the preparation of the story for telling, illustration of it by maps and pictures; the review of early American history.

Second Term. — Intermediate grade work; aims, methods and principles; study of colonial life, including the Revolution; making of lesson plans on this topic.

Third Term. — Upper grade work; aims, principles and methods; the study of the grouping of the period since the Revolution; comparison of courses of study; discussion of problems.

Fourth Term. — An elective course open to selected students of the senior class who have completed creditably the regular course.

Mathematics.

The subjects studied in mathematics are arithmetic, algebra and geometry. The aim is to reinforce, enlarge and improve the students' knowledge of the subject-matter, and to give preparation in the principles and methods of teaching. Emphasis is placed upon the unity of these subjects, upon the fundamental importance of principles and upon the progressive development of mathematical laws. Much practice is given in mathematical processes in order that sufficient skill may be acquired to meet the future needs of the students.

As arithmetic is the subject most taught by normal school graduates, algebra and geometry are studied with especial attention to those general principles which give mastery to the teaching of arithmetic. An effort is made to present mathematics so that the best results of the study may be the attainment of ideals capable of wide application. These ideals are kept definitely before the students as their most valuable reward in the study of mathematics. The ultimate aim of the instruction is to make students able to think, to do and to teach, and to prepare them to meet the demands of new ideas and changing conditions in regard to elementary mathematics.

Manual Arts.

The purpose of this department is —

(a) To give practice in representing and making, so that the graduate may have confidence in his own skill before a class.

(b) To give enough of the history of manual arts to establish their importance in shaping history and social life, that the graduate may in turn give them a place in the school life of the child similar to that which they hold in the industrial life of the community.

(c) To give opportunities for observation of works of art, that the student may learn to appreciate the beautiful in nature and art.

Representation: —

(a) Quick sketching.

(b) Drawing and painting of natural and made objects in outline — light and shade and color.

(c) Recording of facts observed in botany, history, etc.

Constructive drawing: —

(a) Lettering.

(b) Freehand sketches of objects to be constructed in shop.

(c) Drafting with instruments.

Decorative design: —

(a) Theory of color.

(b) Theory and practice of design in developing good taste with regard to every-day environment.

(c) Lectures on painting, sculpture, architecture and modern civic improvement.

Best designs for bridges, buildings, furniture, etc., examined.

Throughout this work is correlated with sewing and shop work, which includes cardboard construction, bookbinding, making and use of stencils, maps, charts, teaching devices and such illustrative material as is required for use in schools, pottery, metal work, woodwork, dyeing, weaving, embroidery, basketry and wood carving.

Music.

The course includes drill in the rudiments of music, a review of the course of study of the elementary public schools, some instruction in methods of teaching music in the grades, and a constant use of the rote songs and other music customarily employed in the first eight grades.

In addition, fully one-half of the time of the course is devoted to chorus work, in which the entire school takes part. This is supplemented by concerts, musicales and pianola and Victor reproductions of music of a type calculated to develop a high degree of taste and culture.

Physical Training.

The purpose of the department is to aid the student in forming good physical habits, to increase his endurance and physical efficiency, to train him to become a serviceable worker in the school and playground.

The gymnasium course includes freehand work, marching, fancy steps, folk and social dancing, work with wands, bells, clubs, balls of all kinds, correct use of fixed apparatus of Swedish, German and American types, the gymnastics of the Swedish schoolroom.

The outdoor work includes relay races, jump rope and hoop work, stilts and the usual plays and games of children, besides ice and field hockey, cricket, scrub, tennis, playground dances, etc.

The personal hygiene talks aim to connect very closely with the students' lives, to conform to what their habits show they need to be taught.

Students make wands, balls, kites, battledores, shuttlecocks, stilts, to show that schools may have these without cost.

Interclass matches at cricket, volley ball, battle ball, etc., are held; game days, May-pole dances and folk-dance exhibits are given.

STODDARD TERRACE.

This building is a dormitory, built on the cottage plan, for the accommodation of about thirty girls. It is heated by steam and lighted by electricity, has a comfortable parlor, an attractive music room, and is, in every way, a convenient and satisfactory school home.

Within the past year all the necessary appliances for cooking have been installed and a spacious dining room added. The price for board, fixed for all the normal schools in the State, is $160 for the school year, payable in advance, $40 in September, $40 on November 15, $40 on February 1, and $40 on April 15.

The house is in charge of a matron. Pupils whose homes are not in Worcester are advised to live at the dormitory.

THE PLATFORM EXERCISE. — ORAL EXPRESSION.

This exercise consists chiefly of speaking for a few minutes, with or without notes, to the assembled school from the platform of the main hall. The range of topics is unlimited, and the choice in each case rests wholly with the student who gives the exercise.

It is quite significant that, notwithstanding its obviously trying character, the platform exercise is and has always been one of the two or three most valued that the school offers, and its popularity with the students grows with their growing maturity throughout the three years' course, and really culminates only when the graduates look back upon the exercise in after years. Their explicit testimony to this is unequivocal and almost unanimous.

The most striking evidence that this discipline accomplishes in a good degree the purpose for which it is maintained is afforded by the fact that each class in the school shows a distinct gain in precision, ease and effectiveness of speech over the class next below it; the seniors always taking the lead, and the pupils in their first term following at a long distance behind.

APPRENTICESHIP. — PRACTICE TEACHING.

Practice teaching takes the form of an apprenticeship at teaching in the public schools of the city. As Worcester has a population of about one hundred and forty thousand, and employs over six hundred teachers in its public schools, the field thus furnished for practice is ample.

During the first half of the second year of attendance at the normal school students are permitted, through the courtesy of the public school authorities of the city, to spend two hours a week in visiting schools. These visits are arranged for beforehand with selected public school teachers, so that the students may receive the greatest benefit from them, and, as a rule, no more than a half-dozen students at a time visit any one room. They thus see the ordinary working of the school, free from any of the elements of an exhibition. The students make written reports to the normal school supervisors on their observations, and these are later discussed in class.

After this preparation students are ready to take an active, though subordinate part in school management; and in the latter half of their second year they serve, without pay, as apprentices to the regular teachers. Each appointment is for about six weeks of four school days each, and there are three appointments during each half-year, beginning with the primary grades and ending with the grammar grades. Thus each student acquires an intimate knowledge of the whole range of the public schools below the high school.

On the part of the normal school, three of the staff, acting as supervisors, spend a considerable portion of their time in visiting apprentices. By observing teaching, examining written work, looking over lesson-plans and consulting with both apprentice and teacher, a good idea of the needs and progress of the apprentice is obtained, and suggestions and criticism are freely offered. The apprentice keeps a diary, which is given each week to the supervisor.

On Saturday, which is a school day at the normal school, the apprentice class is in attendance, and meets there each supervisor, who makes such general criticisms, explanations and suggestions as may have interest for, and application to, the whole class. The rest of the time on Saturday the apprentice spends in preparing for her work, — consulting books and teachers, gathering material, and comparing notes and exchanging views with her classmates. This intercourse with each other brings the experience of the whole class before every member, and methods, devices and expedients are passed through a sort of clearing-house, where each may select what seems to her of value.

For those students who possess the requisite maturity and scholarship, assignments as apprentices in any of the three high schools of the city are made, where they are given such part in the instruction as they are able to undertake, and where they may receive training and practice not afforded by grammar schools. This enables the normal school authorities to offer a special course of a year and a half for college graduates, — a year of professional study and a half-year of apprenticeship, — with the entire school system of the city at their disposal.

In addition to the facilities for practice already described, the normal school has valuable privileges in two special schools, — at the Washburn Memorial Hospital and at the Worcester County Training School in Oakdale, a few miles from the city. At the Memorial Hospital there are often children who are detained there during convalescence, or who are undergoing long courses of treatment which would not interfere with their power of doing some kinds of school work if the conditions were properly controlled. To give these children some intellectual occupation and interest is, indeed, sometimes, to assist in their cure. For such the authorities at the hospital have arranged a schoolroom, and the normal school sends regularly two experienced apprentices, who conduct classes and give individual instruction. Since the children are of all ages and stages of advancement, the school becomes of necessity an ungraded one, and from its very nature presents exceptional conditions and children. The apprentice therefore receives training in a direction not permitted by her other work, and resource, adaptability, tact and teaching skill are developed in a way that supplements the regular training.

At the Training School the apprentice is received on the same terms as in the public schools of the city. She is under the direction of the superintendent and in the immediate charge of the teacher employed there. The difference, as may be inferred, is in having a class of boys to deal with who are exceptional in many ways. The experience of the apprentice in this school gives her good training in the exercise of her art, and special training in the management of a class of exceptional pupils.

In addition to the books in the reference library of the normal school, which are lent to the apprentices on the same terms as to the other pupils, there is a large and constantly increasing collection of material which is especially for the use of the apprentices. This comprises: (a) a special line of books useful in teaching, such as books on methods and devices, supplementary readers, collections of fairy tales and fables, historical stories, books on nature and nature study, and collections of music suitable for teaching rote-songs; (b) several hundred wall charts, illustrating natural history, the natural sciences, arts and manufactures, geography and methods of teaching such subjects as reading, writing and drawing; (c) about seven hundred pictures of birds and animals of all countries, mounted on cards, and large enough to be seen by a whole class; (d) collections of native animals, birds, insects, plants, woods, minerals, rocks, fossils and local manufactures; (e) maps, including political, topographical, relief models, outline blackboard stencils, outline maps on blackboard cloth, historical maps to illustrate the periods of discovery and of territorial growth, maps of campaigns and battles, and many others of special nature; (f) a collection of pictures of places of historic interest, of portraits of celebrated men and women, of types of fine architecture, painting and sculpture. Besides these collections, the school owns three duplicating machines, which the pupils are taught to use, which enables the apprentices to print any number of copies of maps, drawings or notes on any subject of study, for the use of their pupils. All these things are made available by a card catalogue.

PRACTICE SCHOOL.

It is hoped within the coming year to supplement the apprenticeship system with the advantages of a practice school, in which the conditions of instruction shall be under such control as will bring the greatest practical benefit to the students of the normal school.

ROOM FOR PLANT STUDY.

EMPLOYMENT OF GRADUATES.

The location of the graduates in schools of their own is accomplished almost wholly through the agency of this school. Of last year's class, all but two are in charge of schools; one of the two has been denied teaching because of sickness and the other has found work in the Public Library. Many members of a senior class receive offers of positions before the close of the school year from superintendents who visit the school for the purpose of securing teachers to fill impending vacancies. In 1908, 40 per cent. of the class received appointments before the end of the school year.

The school keeps in touch with the recent graduates and has on file a record of their work since graduation. From this list recommendations are made to superintendents who are in search of teachers of experience. Every year circulars seeking information concerning their present positions are sent to those graduates who are not teaching under a permanent system of advancement, as in most city schools. Thus most graduates of the school obtain their first charges, and many receive one or more offers of advancement at a later time, through the mediation of the school.

THE LIBRARY

One of the most valuable qualifications of a teacher is an alert mind, in touch with the world of books and alive with interest in the important events of the day. The possession of the reading habit, combined with discriminating judgment and taste, is most desirable for every teacher. No pains are spared to make all conditions favorable for cultivation in this direction. Books, magazines and newspapers are not only made easily accessible, but they are constantly brought to the attention of the school as a whole by talks from teachers, by references in class work and by interviews with individual students.

Books are constantly added to the reference library, which consists of about eight thousand carefully selected volumes. The "new book table," where the accessions are first placed, is a most inviting place for any reader. Magazines and newspapers are abundantly supplied in an attractive reading room always open to the school. Here the card catalogue is placed, and a bulletin board where clippings are posted. Talks on books and reading are frequently given by the members of the faculty and by speakers invited to come to the school for this purpose. Many of the books given out in classes as text-books are of such a character as to deserve for them a place on the shelves of the reference library also. The superior character of books used in classes in professional subjects, in history, literature, hygiene and other fields makes the future teacher familiar with the best books.

Training in the right reading of good newspapers is also persistently carried on through a committee of students, which is also organized as a clipping bureau.

Each student has practice in library work, acting as librarian of a collection of books. The whole reference library is taken care of in this way by members of the school, who work under the instruction and direction of one of the teachers. In this way students learn how to safeguard, while freely using books in their own schools later, when as teachers they become responsible for school libraries, or for books lent by public libraries for the home reading of children.

Text-books are given out, recorded and finally collected at the end of the term by "class librarians." In this and in other ways methods are used capable of modification to meet the needs of the student when she becomes a teacher.

LUNCH ROOM.

This year pupils and teachers have been glad to avail themselves of the opportunity to get their mid-day meal at Stoddard Terrace, where a substantial luncheon is furnished them. Three rooms have been fitted up for this purpose, and on the days of largest attendance fifty or more persons assembled in them.

The rest of the pupils eat the lunch they have brought from home in the school lunch room. Here a hot closet makes it possible to warm food or drink, as desired, and boiling water is supplied for the making of cocoa.

HEALTH.

Instruction in Hygiene. — A marked feature of the school is the special attention directed not only to the physical well-being of the pupils, but to such instruction as will enable them to deal practically with living questions of hygiene as they arise in every-day life. The pupils are both taught to understand the conditions of healthful life, and trained and assisted to put into practice the instruction they receive in the care of health. They have careful oversight, and are advised individually according to their needs. No pupil enters the school without furnishing a physician's certificate of good health, and no pupil is allowed to remain whose physical condition is not thought equal to the demands of the school work. Special efforts are made to counteract any tendency to overwork, over-excitement or hurry. No recitations or study periods are longer than forty minutes, and during the ample and frequent intervals of relaxation school work is completely put aside.

STATE AID.

The Commonwealth has regularly appropriated several hundred dollars a year to each of its normal schools, to be divided among such pupils as are most needy and deserving. This school of course receives its proper share of such funds, and is able to render assistance to a number of students each year. Aid is not furnished during the first term of attendance. Applications for this aid are to be made to the principal, in writing, and must be accompanied by such evidence as shall satisfy him that the applicant needs the aid.

The State also gives the use of all the text-books required in the course, as well as free access to an ample and well-selected library of reference and general literature.

NORMAL SCHOOL SCHOLARSHIPS AT HARVARD.

There are four scholarships in the scientific school of Harvard University for the benefit of graduates of the State normal schools. The annual value of each of these scholarships is $150, which is the price of tuition, so that the holder of the scholarship gets his tuition free.

The incumbents are originally appointed for one year, on the recommendation of the principals of the schools from which they have been severally graduated. These appointments may be annually renewed, on the recommendation of the faculty of the scientific school.

Leave of Absence. — It is often the case that, through weak health or stress of circumstances, pupils may be obliged to miss one, two, three or more terms. It is in the interest of such that the course need not be pursued uninterruptedly to the end. Students may, and often do, obtain leave of absence to teach or to rest, and resume their work afterwards. This divides but does not shorten their course of study.

GENERAL FACILITIES.

Incidental Advantages. — Important facilities for general improvement are offered to pupils in the libraries, institutions and other means of culture in which Worcester is rich.

The extensive and well-arranged museum of the Worcester Natural History Society is open for inspection, and specimens in all departments can be borrowed by teachers and students, and taken to the school for purposes of study and illustration.

The hall of the American Antiquarian Society contains a notably rich store of interesting exhibits, and the library includes a rare treasury of books pertaining to American history.

The free public library stands high among the institutions of the kind in this country, for the effective relationship existing between it and the schools. Its large and well-endowed reference library, its well-filled circulating department, its reading rooms, supplied with the leading domestic and foreign papers and periodicals, afford exceptional opportunities to the schools. Special facilities are offered to teachers and pupils, and the librarian is unsparing in his efforts to render every aid in the choice and use of books or in any way in which he can assist the reader.

The Worcester Art Museum is now to be added to the foregoing list.

Railroad Fares. — The many lines of railroad and trolley cars centering in Worcester afford easy communication with the neighboring towns and villages. Season tickets or mileage tickets are issued by the railroads to pupils of the normal school at greatly reduced rates, and the daily sessions of the school are so arranged as to accommodate those who wish to come and go by the cars.

TO SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS.

Every year in the months of April and May our senior class is approaching the time of its graduation in June. The class usually includes from forty to fifty members, mostly young women, about twenty-two years of age. These students, after having graduated from high school, have spent three years in special study and practice, under our instruction and supervision, to fit themselves for teachers in the public schools of this Commonwealth. Every one of them has given, in the school-room, good evidence of ability to teach. Their apprenticeship in carefully selected public schools of this city has afforded opportunity not only to acquire good methods of teaching, but also to gain considerable command of the art of school management and discipline. They are therefore capable of taking at once positions of some responsibility. Of course there are differences among them, — differences in native ability, in scholarly acquirements and in aptitude for special kinds of service.

Superintendents in search of teachers like to see candidates and talk with them, and candidates on their part like to learn something about the positions they are asked to take. So it has come about that an increasing number of superintendents visit us during the months above named, and have personal interviews with members of the senior class with reference to probable vacancies to occur in the autumn. We are always ready to afford opportunity for such interviews, as well as to furnish any information that may help to make engagements mutually advantageous. Thus it happens that a certain proportion of our most promising seniors are engaged to teach before graduation day arrives, and during the ensuing summer are making more or less preparation for their work.

CLASS REUNIONS.

A prominent feature of this school is the frequency and regularity of the class gatherings that are held, and the special provision made here for their accommodation. The graduates maintain an active Graduates' Association, embracing practically all (now somewhat more than twelve hundred) who hold the diploma of the school, and their annual meeting in June never fails to bring together large numbers.

But this, though an occasion of unflagging interest, does not furnish sufficient opportunity for the social intercourse of classmates, or the expression of class spirit. So it has come about that a series of class reunions goes on throughout the entire year, making a distinctive feature of graduate life, and at the same time quickening the current of the school.

A suite of rooms in the main school building, consisting of a large reception-room, with dining-room and kitchen adjoining, has been set apart for this purpose, and the graduates have fitted up and furnished them to serve as club rooms for the Association. They are never used except by the graduates, who are urged to feel entirely at home in them. Each class as it comes to the tenth anniversary of its graduation celebrates the occasion by a gift to these rooms, which in this way have been attractively furnished. Thus each graduate feels a personal and vital interest in the rooms she has helped to furnish and beautify.

By previous arrangement of dates, every Saturday afternoon throughout the school year sees a gathering of graduates in these rooms, composed sometimes of a single class, more often of two or more classes, the members of which were pupils in the school at the same time. Saturday is a holiday with those who are teaching in the public schools, but is a regular school day with us; so the reunion includes a visit to alma mater, with the opportunity to exchange greetings with the faculty, and to see the school. A constant feature of these occasions, and one which never lacks appreciation, is a supper prepared by a committee from the class appointed for that purpose at the preceding reunion. While this repast or some part of it may be ordered from a caterer, it is often prepared largely in the graduates' kitchen, and is always served in their own dining-room, which has a complete service of china, silverware and napery. Then follows an evening of social intercourse, which, in the case of the younger classes, often ends with dancing in the gymnasium. In this pleasant way the graduates keep in touch with the school, which they come to regard as a second home, feeling that a warm welcome always awaits them here; while at the same time their visits furnish the undergraduates with a constant object-lesson in friendly attachment to each other and loyalty to the school.

All the classes have fixed upon permanent dates, for their class reunions, as given below: —

FRONT OF ASSEMBLY HALL.

State Normal School at Worcester.

AIM AND PURPOSE OF THE SCHOOL.

The Board of Education, by a vote passed May 6, 1880, stated the design of the school and the course of studies for the State normal schools as follows: —

The design of the normal school is strictly professional; that is, to prepare in the best possible manner the pupils for the work of organizing, governing and teaching the public schools of the Commonwealth.

To this end there must be the most thorough knowledge: first, of the branches of learning required to be taught in the schools; second, of the best methods of teaching these branches; and third, of right mental training.

CONDITIONS OF ADMISSION.

Candidates for admission to any one of the normal schools must have attained the age of seventeen years complete if young men, and sixteen years if young women, and must have shown upon physical examination that they are free from any disease or infirmity which would unfit them for the office of teacher.

They must present a certificate of good moral character, give evidence of good intellectual capacity, be graduates of a high school whose courses of study have been approved by the Board of Education, or they must have received, to the satisfaction of the principal of the school, the equivalent of a good high school education. Candidates must also declare their intention to complete the course of study in the school and afterwards to teach in the public schools of Massachusetts.

Tuition is free to residents of Massachusetts, but each non-resident pupil is required to pay a tuition fee of $25 at the beginning of each half-yearly session.

THE EXAMINATION.

IMPORTANT NOTICE. — Special attention is invited to the following vote of the State Board of Education, passed on May 2, 1907: —

Candidates from high schools which are on the certificate list of the New England College Entrance Examination Board may be admitted to any of the State normal schools without examination in any subject required for admission in which they have attained a standing of B, or 80 per cent., as certified by the principal of the school.

The examination will embrace the following groups: —

I. Languages. — (a) English, with its grammar and literature, and (b) either Latin or French.

II. Mathematics. — (a) The elements of algebra and (b) the elements of plane geometry.

III. History and Geography. — The history and civil government of Massachusetts and the United States, with related geography and so much of English history as is directly contributory to a knowledge of United States history.

IV. Sciences. — (a) Physiology and hygiene, and (b and c) any two of the following: physics, chemistry, physical geography and botany, provided one of the two selected is either physics or chemistry.

V. Drawing and Music. — (a) Elementary, mechanical and free-hand drawing, with any one of the topics, — form, color and arrangement; and (b) musical notation, with ability to sing, if practicable.

I. — LANGUAGES.

(a) ENGLISH. — The subjects of the examination will be the same as those generally agreed upon by the colleges and high technical schools of New England.

The books for study in 1911 are: Shakespeare's Macbeth; Milton's L'Allegro; Burke's Speech on Conciliation with America, or Washington's Farewell Address and Webster's First Bunker Hill Oration; Macaulay's Life of Johnson, or Carlyle's Essay on Burns.

The purpose of the examination is to discover, (1) whether the student has acquired a good habit of study, (2) whether he has formed any standards of literary judgment, (3) whether he has become discerning of literary merit, and (4) what acquaintance he has with standard English and American writers.

The examination will take such a form that students who have followed other than the prescribed lines of reading may be able to satisfy the examiners on the above points.

In addition, the candidate may be required to answer questions involving the essentials of English grammar, and questions on the leading facts in those periods of English literary history to which the prescribed works belong.

(b) One only of the two languages, Latin and French. The translation at sight of simple prose, with questions on the usual forms and ordinary constructions of the language.

II. — Mathematics.

(a) The elements of algebra through affected quadratic equations.

(b) The elements of plane geometry, including original work, both with theorems and problems.

III. — United States History.

The examination calls for a knowledge of the history and civil government of Massachusetts and the United States.

IV. — Sciences.

(a) Physiology and Hygiene. — The elementary facts of anatomy, the general functions of the various organs, the more obvious rules of health, and the effects of alcoholic drinks, narcotics and stimulants upon those addicted to their use.

(b) and (c) Any two of the following sciences, — physics, chemistry, botany, physical geography, — provided one of the two is either physics or chemistry. The elementary principles of these subjects, so far as they may be presented in the courses usually devoted to them in good high schools.

V. — Drawing and Music.

(a) Drawing. — Mechanical and freehand drawing, enough to enable the candidate to draw a simple object, like a box or a pyramid or a cylinder, with plan and elevation to scale, and to make a freehand sketch of the same in perspective. Also, any one of the three topics, — form, color and arrangement.

(b) Music. — Such elementary facts as an instructor should know in teaching singing in the schools, including major and minor keys, simple two, three, four and six part measures, the fractional divisions of the pulse or beat, the chromatic scale, the right use of the foregoing elements in practice, and the translation in musical notation of simple melodies or of time phrases sung or played.

It may be said in general, that, if the ordinary work of a good statutory high school, as defined by section 2, chapter 496 of the Acts of 1898, is well done, a student should be able to meet the requirements of these examinations.

The importance of a good record in the high school cannot be overestimated. The stronger the evidences of character, scholarship and promise, of whatever kind, he brings from his school and his teachers, especially from schools of high reputation and from teachers of good judgment and fearless expression, the greater confidence he may have in guarding himself against the contingencies of an examination and of satisfying the examiners of his fitness.

Reasonable allowance in equivalents will be made in case the candidate, for satisfactory reasons, has not taken a study named for examination.

The following approximate time allowances will indicate the brevity of the papers that may be set for examination: —

I. Languages, two hours.
II. Mathematics, two hours.
III. History and Geography, one hour.
IV. Sciences, two hours.
V. Drawing and Music, one hour.

Oral Examination.

The candidate may be questioned orally either upon some of the foregoing subjects or upon matters of common interest to him and the school, at the discretion of the examiners.

The examinations are held at the main building, beginning at 9 A.M.; and lunch should be brought each day, on account of the distance of the school from the centre of the city.

Private examinations cannot be given.

COURSES OF STUDY.

The Regular Course.

The general course of study for two years shall comprise the following subjects: —

Psychology, history of education, principles of education, methods of instruction and discipline, school organization, school laws of Massachusetts, methods of teaching the following subjects: —

1. English, — reading, language, rhetoric, composition, literature, history.
2. Mathematics, — arithmetic, algebra, geometry.
3. Science, — elementary physics and chemistry, geography, physiology, study of minerals, plants and animals.
4. Drawing, vocal music, physical culture, manual training.

Observation and practice in the training school, and observation in other public schools.

The above is an enumeration of the studies; their order in the course and the relative emphasis placed upon each are determined by the principal of each school, with the approval of the Commissioner of Education.

It also needs to be stated that, while the foregoing list of subjects marks out the field covered in the school curriculum, it gives no adequate idea of the actual work done. It is made a special aim to seize every opportunity to give the pupils the benefit of whatever tends to fit them for the work of teaching. The spirit of this endeavor pervades the whole school. It influences the mode and character of most of the exercises, and imparts to the whole work a tone and zest difficult to describe, but which determines whatever of distinctive character the normal school possesses.

In addition to the study of the theory of teaching, outlined above, a full year is given to practice in the schools of Worcester. This makes the regular course three years in length. Some students, however, who have taught successfully for a school year, may have the practice apprentice work, as outlined on page 13, remitted.

Elementary Course of Study for Two Years.

The elementary course of study is designed primarily for those who aim to teach in the first six grades of the public schools. It comprises substantially the following subjects: —

I. The study of the educational values of the following subjects and of the principles and methods of teaching them: —

(a) English, — reading, oral and written composition, grammar, English and American literature.

(b) Mathematics, arithmetic.

(c) History, — history and civics.

(d) Science, — elementary science, geography, physiology and hygiene.

(e) Drawing, vocal music, physical training, manual training.

II. (a) The study of psychology, for the principles of education; the study of the application of these principles in school organization, school government and in the art of teaching; the history of education; the school laws of Massachusetts.

(b) Observation and practice.

The time required for the completion of this course depends upon the student. In many cases more than two years are required. A diploma is given when the course is satisfactorily completed.

Special Course for College Graduates.

Students holding the degree of Bachelor of Arts or Bachelor of Science may, after passing the regular entrance examinations, enter at once upon a year's course in the principles and methods of teaching, to be followed by a six months' apprenticeship in the public schools of Worcester, under conditions highly favorable to the acquisition of practical skill in teaching, whether in grammar or high schools.

A One Year's Course for Experienced Teachers.

Teachers of successful experience in teaching, who bring satisfactory testimonials of maturity, good scholarship and of aptness to teach, may select a course, approved by the principal, which may be completed in one year, and when such a course is successfully completed they shall receive a certificate for the same.

Kindergarten Course.

The school now offers an opportunity for those who desire to prepare themselves as kindergarten teachers. The requirements for admission are the same as for the general course, and, in addition, the ability to sing and play. The course includes, in the first year, the professional studies of the junior class, English, drawing and music; the second year is mainly devoted to actual teaching and to study of the theory and practice of the kindergarten.

APPRENTICESHIP. — PRACTICE TEACHING.

Practice teaching takes the form of an apprenticeship at teaching in the public schools of the city. As Worcester has a population of about one hundred and forty thousand, and employs over six hundred teachers in its public schools, the field thus furnished for practice is ample.

Throughout the entire first year and during the first half of the second year of attendance at the normal school, students are permitted, through the courtesy of the public school authorities of the city, to spend two hours a week in visiting schools. These visits are arranged for beforehand with selected public school teachers, so that the students may receive the greatest benefit from them, and, as a rule, no more than ten students at a time visit any one room. They thus see the ordinary working of the school, free from any of the elements of an exhibition. The students make written reports to the normal school supervisors on their observations, and these are later discussed in class.

After this preparation students are ready to take an active, though subordinate part in school management; and in the latter half of their second year they serve, without pay, as apprentices to the regular teachers. Each appointment is for about six weeks of four school days each, and there are three appointments during each half-year, beginning with the primary grades and ending with the grammar grades. Thus each student acquires an intimate knowledge of the whole range of the public schools below the high school.

On the part of the normal school, three of the staff, acting as supervisors, spend a considerable portion of their time in visiting apprentices. By observing teaching, examining written work, looking over lesson-plans and consulting with both apprentice and teacher, a good idea of the needs and progress of the apprentice is obtained, and suggestions and criticism are freely offered. The apprentice keeps a diary, which is given each week to a supervisor.

On Saturday, which is a school day at the normal school, the apprentice class is in attendance, and meets there each supervisor, who makes such general criticisms, explanations and suggestions as may have interest for, and application to the whole class. The rest of the time on Saturday the apprentice spends in preparing for her work, — consulting books and teachers, gathering material, and comparing notes and exchanging views with her classmates. This intercourse with each other brings the experience of the whole class before every member, and methods, devices and expedients are passed through a sort of clearing-house, where each may select what seems to her of value.

For those students who possess the requisite maturity and scholarship, assignments as apprentices in any of the three high schools of the city are made, where they are given such part in the instruction as they are able to undertake, and where they may receive training and practice not afforded by grammar schools. This enables the normal school authorities to offer a special course of a year and a half for college graduates, — a year of professional study and a half-year of apprenticeship, — with the entire school system of the city at their disposal.

In addition to the facilities for practice already described, the normal school has valuable privileges in two special schools, — the Washburn Memorial Hospital and the Worcester County Training School in Oakdale, a few miles from the city. At the Memorial Hospital there are often children who are detained there during convalescence, or who are undergoing long courses of treatment which would not interfere with their power of doing some kinds of school work if the conditions were properly controlled. To give these children some intellectual occupation and interest is, indeed, sometimes, to assist in their cure. For such the authorities at the hospital have arranged a schoolroom, and the normal school sends regularly two experienced apprentices, who conduct classes and give individual instruction. Since the children are of all ages and stages of advancement, the school becomes of necessity an ungraded one, and from its very nature presents exceptional conditions and children. The apprentice therefore receives training in a direction not permitted by her other work, and resource, adaptability, tact and teaching skill are developed in a way that supplements the regular training.

At the Training School the apprentice is received on the same terms as in the public schools of the city. She is under the direction of the superintendent and in the immediate charge of the teacher employed there. The difference, as may be inferred, is in having a class of boys to deal with who are exceptional in many ways. The experience of the apprentice in this school gives her good training in the exercise of her art, and special training in the management of a class of exceptional pupils.

In addition to the books in the reference library of the normal school, which are lent to the apprentices on the same terms as to the other pupils, there is a large and constantly increasing collection of material which is especially for the use of the apprentices. This comprises: (a) a special line of books useful in teaching, such as books on methods and devices, supplementary readers, collections of fairy tales and fables, historical stories, books on nature and nature study, and collections of music suitable for teaching rote-songs; (b) several hundred wall charts, illustrating natural history, the natural sciences, arts and manufactures, geography and methods of teaching such subjects as reading, writing and drawing; (c) about seven hundred pictures of birds and animals of all countries, mounted on cards, and large enough to be seen by a whole class; (d) collections of native animals, birds, insects, plants, woods, minerals, rocks, fossils and local manufactures; (e) maps, including political, topographical, relief models, outline blackboard stencils, outline maps on blackboard cloth, historical maps to illustrate the periods of discovery and of territorial growth, maps of campaigns and battles, and many others of special nature; (f) a collection of pictures of places of historic interest, of portraits of celebrated men and women, of types of fine architecture, painting and sculpture. Besides these collections, the school owns three duplicating machines, which the pupils are taught to use, and which enable the apprentices to print any number of copies of maps, drawings or notes on any subject of study, for the use of their pupils. All these things are made available by a card catalogue.

PRACTICE SCHOOL.

It is hoped within the coming year to supplement the apprenticeship system with the advantages of a practice school, in which the conditions of instruction shall be under such control as will bring the greatest practical benefit to the students of the normal school.

THE PLATFORM EXERCISE.—ORAL EXPRESSION.

This exercise consists chiefly of speaking for a few minutes, with or without notes, to the assembled school from the platform of the main hall. The range of topics is unlimited, and the choice in each case rests wholly with the student who gives the exercise.

It is quite significant that, notwithstanding its obviously trying character, the platform exercise is and has always been one of the two or three most valued that the school offers. Its popularity with the students grows with their growing maturity throughout the three years' course, and really culminates only when the graduates look back upon the exercise in after years. Their explicit testimony to this is unequivocal and almost unanimous.

The most striking evidence that this discipline accomplishes in a good degree the purpose for which it is maintained is afforded by the fact that each class in the school shows a distinct gain in precision, ease and effectiveness of speech over the class next below it; the seniors always taking the lead, and the pupils in their first term following at a long distance behind.

THE LIBRARY.

One of the most valuable qualifications of a teacher is an alert mind, in touch with the world of books and alive with interest in the important events of the day. The possession of the reading habit, combined with discriminating judgment and taste, is most desirable for every teacher. No pains are spared to make all conditions favorable for cultivation in this direction. Books, magazines and newspapers are not only made easily accessible, but they are constantly brought to the attention of the school as a whole by talks from teachers, by references in class work and by interviews with individual students.

Books are constantly added to the reference library, which consists of about eight thousand carefully selected volumes. The "new book table," where the accessions are first placed, is a most inviting place for any reader. Magazines and newspapers are abundantly supplied in an attractive reading room always open to the school. Here the card catalogue is placed, and a bulletin board where clippings are posted. Talks on books and reading are frequently given by the members of the faculty and by speakers invited to come to the school for this purpose. Many of the books given out in classes as text-books are of such a character as to deserve for them a place on the shelves of the reference library also. The superior character of books used in classes in professional subjects, in history, literature, hygiene and other fields makes the future teacher familiar with the best books.

Training in the right reading of good newspapers is also persistently carried on through a committee of students, which is also organized as a clipping bureau.

Each student has practice in library work, acting as librarian of a collection of books. The whole reference library is taken care of in this way by members of the school, who work under the instruction and direction of one of the teachers. In this way students learn how to safeguard books in their own schools later, when as teachers they become responsible for school libraries, or for books lent by public libraries for the home reading of children.

Text-books are given out, recorded and finally collected at the end of the term by "class librarians." In this and in other ways methods are used capable of modification to meet the needs of the student when she becomes a teacher.

STODDARD TERRACE.

This building is a dormitory, built on the cottage plan, for the accommodation of about thirty girls. It is heated by steam and lighted by electricity, has a comfortable parlor and an attractive music room, and is, in every way, a convenient and satisfactory school home.

Here are all the necessary appliances for cooking and a spacious dining room. The price for board, fixed for all the normal schools in the State, is $160 for the school year, payable in advance, $40 in September, $40 on November 15, $40 on February 1, and $40 on April 15.

The house is in charge of a matron. Pupils whose homes are not in Worcester are advised to live at the dormitory.

LUNCH ROOM.

This year pupils and teachers have been glad to avail themselves of the opportunity to get their mid-day meal at Stoddard Terrace, where a substantial luncheon is furnished them. Rooms have been fitted up for this purpose, and on the days of largest attendance seventy-five or more persons assembled in them.

The rest of the pupils eat the lunch they have brought from home in the school lunch room. Here a hot closet makes it possible to warm food or drink, as desired, and boiling water is supplied for the making of cocoa.

GENERAL INFORMATION.

Hygiene.

No pupil is allowed to enter the school who is not able to pass a physical examination, and no pupil is allowed to remain whose physical condition is not thought equal to the demands of the school work. Special efforts are made to counteract any tendency to overwork, over-excitement or hurry. No recitations or study periods are longer than forty minutes, and during the ample and frequent intervals of relaxation school work is completely put aside.

Systematic instruction is given in the elementary and fundamental facts of anatomy, physiology and hygiene. The physical life of the child is regarded as a subject of great importance. Under this subject such topics as growth, ventilation, food, fatigue, eyestrain, dental hygiene, adenoids, etc., are studied in relation to the physical and mental development of the school child. Some instruction is given relative to the aims and methods of teaching hygiene in the public schools.

The personal hygiene talks aim to connect very closely with the students' lives, to conform to what their habits show they need to be taught.

Every pupil is required to take the regular courses in physical training.

The purpose of the department is to aid the student in forming good physical habits, to increase his endurance and physical efficiency, to train him to become a serviceable worker in the school and on the playground.

The outdoor work includes relay races, jump rope and hoop work, stilts and the usual plays and games of children, besides ice and field hockey, cricket, scrub, tennis, playground dances, etc.

Interclass matches at cricket, volley ball, battle ball, etc., are held; game days, May-pole dances and folk-dance exhibits are given.

The School Garden.

In furtherance of the courses in nature study and manual training the pupils maintain a school garden. Although the area is not large, yet by division of labor every pupil comes to have some first-hand knowledge of plants and some skill in caring for them.

They raise the common vegetables and flowers, — the things they will find best adapted for the gardens they will some day supervise as teachers. Their attention is directed to the possibilities of gardening even in the thickly settled portions of the city, and they are encouraged to plant seeds at home.

During the winter months window boxes in the various rooms of the school building furnish opportunity for indoor gardening.

Employment of Graduates.

The location of the graduates in schools of their own is accomplished almost wholly through the agency of this school. Of last year's class, all who have desired have schools of their own. One or two prefer to work as substitutes in the Worcester schools rather than to accept a country school position and one of the men has entered Harvard. Many members of a senior class receive offers of positions before the close of the school year from superintendents who visit the school for the purpose of securing teachers to fill impending vacancies.

The school keeps in touch with the recent graduates and has on file a record of their work since graduation. From this list recommendations are made to superintendents who are in search of teachers of experience. Every year circulars seeking information concerning their present positions are sent to those graduates who are not teaching under a permanent system of advancement, as in most city schools. Thus most graduates of the school obtain their first charges, and many receive one or more offers of advancement at a later time, through the mediation of the school.

Scholarships at Harvard.

There are four scholarships in the scientific school of Harvard University for the benefit of graduates of the State normal schools. The annual value of each of these scholarships is $150, which is the price of tuition, so that the holder of the scholarship gets his tuition free.

The incumbents are originally appointed for one year, on the recommendation of the principals of the schools from which they have been severally graduated. These appointments may be annually renewed, on the recommendation of the faculty of the scientific school.

Leave of Absence. — It is often the case that, through weak health or stress of circumstances, pupils may be obliged to miss one, two, three or more terms. It is in the interest of such that the course need not be pursued uninterruptedly to the end. Students may, and often do, obtain leave of absence to teach or to rest, and resume their work afterwards. This divides but does not shorten their course of study.

State Aid.

The Commonwealth has regularly appropriated several hundred dollars a year to each of its normal schools, to be divided among such pupils as are most needy and deserving. This school receives its proper share of such funds, and is able to render assistance to a number of students each year. Aid is not furnished during the first term of attendance. Applications for this aid are to be made to the principal, in writing, and must be accompanied by such evidence as shall satisfy him that the applicant needs the aid.

The State also gives the use of all the text-books required in the course, as well as free access to an ample and well-selected library of reference and general literature.

Incidental Advantages.

Important facilities for general improvement are offered to pupils in the libraries, institutions and other means of culture in which Worcester is rich.

The extensive and well-arranged museum of the Worcester Natural History Society is open for inspection, and specimens in all departments can be borrowed by teachers and students, and taken to the school for purposes of study and illustration.

The hall of the American Antiquarian Society contains a notably rich store of interesting exhibits, and the library includes a rare treasury of books pertaining to American history.

The free public library stands high among the institutions of the kind in this country, for the effective relationship existing between it and the schools. Its large and well-endowed reference library, its well-filled circulating department, its reading rooms, supplied with the leading domestic and foreign papers and periodicals, afford exceptional opportunities to the schools. Special facilities are offered to teachers and pupils, and the librarian is unsparing in his efforts to render every aid in the choice and use of books or in any way in which he can assist the reader.

The Worcester Art Museum is to be added to the foregoing list.

Railroad Fares. — The many lines of railroad and trolley cars centering in Worcester afford easy communication with the neighboring towns and villages. Season tickets or mileage tickets are issued by the railroads to pupils of the normal school at greatly reduced rates, and the daily sessions of the school are so arranged as to accommodate those who wish to come and go by the cars.

TO SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS.

Every year, in the months of April and May, our senior class is approaching the time of its graduation in June. The class usually includes from forty to fifty members, mostly young women, about twenty-two years of age. These students, after having graduated from high school, have spent three years in special study and practice, under our instruction and supervision, to fit themselves to teach in the public schools of this Commonwealth. All of them have given, in the schoolroom, good evidence of ability to teach. Their apprenticeship in carefully selected public schools of this city has afforded opportunity not only to acquire good methods of teaching, but also to gain considerable command of the art of school management and discipline. They are therefore capable of taking at once positions of some responsibility. Of course there are differences among them, — differences in native ability, in scholarly acquirements and in aptitude for special kinds of service.

Superintendents in search of teachers like to see candidates and talk with them, and candidates on their part like to learn something about the positions they are asked to take. So it has come about that an increasing number of superintendents visit the school during the months above named, and have personal interviews with members of the senior class with reference to probable vacancies to occur in the autumn. We are always ready to afford opportunity for such interviews, as well as to furnish any information that may help to make engagements mutually advantageous. Thus it happens that a certain proportion of our most promising seniors are engaged to teach before graduation day arrives, and during the ensuing summer are making preparation for their work.

GRADUATES' ASSOCIATION.

The graduate body is so large that the expense of printing their names for the annual catalogue is no longer justified. It is proposed to publish the entire list but once in five years; in the intervening issues only such changes in names and addresses as have been reported during the year will appear. The latest class of graduates will be printed each year, the list of Class Secretaries, the officers of the Graduates' Association and the dates of all Class Reunions.

State Normal School at Worcester.

AIM AND PURPOSE OF THE SCHOOL.

The Board of Education, by a vote passed May 6, 1880, stated the design of the school and the course of studies for the State normal schools as follows: —

The design of the normal school is strictly professional; that is, to prepare in the best possible manner the pupils for the work of organizing, governing and teaching the public schools of the Commonwealth.

To this end there must be the most thorough knowledge: first, of the branches of learning required to be taught in the schools; second, of the best methods of teaching these branches; and third, of right mental training.

REQUIREMENTS FOR ADMISSION.

I. Candidates for admission to any one of the Massachusetts State normal schools must have attained the age of seventeen years complete, if young men, and sixteen years, if young women; must be free from diseases or infirmities which would unfit them for the office of teacher, and must present certificates of good moral character. They must also present detailed records of scholarship from the principal of the high school, or other school in which preparation has been made, showing the amount of time given to individual subjects and the grade therein.

II. Candidates must present by examination or certificate satisfactory evidence of preparation in the following subjects, 14 units being the requirement for admission. A unit represents a year's study in any subject in a secondary school, constituting approximately one-quarter of a full year's work.

A. Prescribed Subjects. — Three units.

(1) English literature and composition, ... 3 units.

B. Elective Subjects. — At least 7 units from the following subjects: —

(2)	Algebra,	1 unit.
(3)	Geometry,	1 unit.
(4)	History, ancient, mediæval and modern, English or American, including civics,	1 unit.
(5)	Latin,	2 units.
(6)	French,	2 units.
(7)	German,	2 units.
(8)	Drawing,[1]	1 unit.
(9)	Physics,	1 unit.
(10)	Chemistry,	1 unit.
(11)	Biology, botany or zoölogy,[1]	1 unit.
(12)	Physical geography,[1]	1 unit.
(13)	Physiology and hygiene,[1]	1 unit.

For the present, the topics included within the foregoing subjects will be such as are usually accepted by Massachusetts colleges for entrance. The outlines submitted by the College Entrance Examination Board (Sub-station 84, New York City) will be found suggestive by the high schools.

C. Additional Subjects. — At least 4 units from any of the foregoing subjects not already offered, or other subjects approved by the secondary school towards the diploma of graduation of the applicant.

III. Examinations. — Each applicant for admission, unless specifically exempted by the provisions of sections IV. and V., must pass entrance examinations in the subjects required under "A" and "B." Examinations in these subjects will be held at each of the normal schools in June and September of each year. Candidates applying for admission by examination will present credentials or certificates from their schools to cover the requirements under "C," and will not be given examinations in these subjects.

IV. Division of Examinations. — Candidates for admission to the normal schools may take all of the examinations at one time, and any or all of them may be taken either in June or in September. If the examinations are divided, the candidate will receive no credit for the first examination, unless he passes in at least 5 of the 10 units required. Examinations may not be divided between different years.

V. Admission on Certificates. — Candidates from public high schools which are on the certificate list of the New England College Entrance Certificate Board, or from public high schools approved by the State Board of Education, for this purpose, may be exempted from examination in any of the subjects under "A" and "B" by the principal of the normal school on the basis of a record of at least 80 per cent. or B in such subject during the last year in which such subject has been pursued, when the principal of the high school shall have certified his belief that the candidate is able to do satisfactory work in the normal school. Such candidates will present credentials for the subjects under "C."

VI. Admission as Special Students. — Graduates of normal schools and colleges and persons having had satisfactory experience in teaching may be admitted as special students, under such regulations as the Board may prescribe.

I. — English.

The list of books for study prescribed by the Commission of Colleges in New England for 1911–15 is as follows: Shakespeare's Macbeth; Milton's Minor Poems or Tennyson's Gareth and Lynette, Lancelot and Elaine and The Passing of Arthur; Burke's Speech on Conciliation with America, or Washington's Farewell Address and Webster's First Bunker Hill Oration; Macaulay's Life of Johnson or Carlyle's Essay on Burns.

The purpose of the examination is to discover, (1) whether the student has acquired a good habit of study, (2) whether he has formed any standards of literary judgment, (3) whether he has become discerning of literary merit, and (4) what acquaintance he has with standard English and American writers.

The examination will take such a form that students who have followed other than the prescribed lines of reading may be able to satisfy the examiners on the above points.

In addition, the candidate may be required to answer questions involving the essentials of English grammar, and questions on the leading facts in those periods of English history to which the prescribed works belong.

II. — Mathematics.

(a) The elements of algebra through affected quadratic equations.

(b) The elements of plane geometry, including original work, both with theorems and problems.

III. — History.

The examination calls for a knowledge of ancient, mediæval and modern, English or American history, including civics.

IV. — Drawing.

Drawing. — Mechanical and freehand drawing, enough to enable the candidate to draw a simple object, like a box or a pyramid or a cylinder, with plan and elevation to scale, and to make a freehand sketch of the same in perspective. Also, any one of the three topics, — form, color and arrangement.

V. — Sciences.

Physics, chemistry, biology, botany or zoölogy, physical geography, physiology and hygiene may be offered. (See p. 8.)

It may be said in general, that, if the ordinary work of a good statutory high school, as defined by section 2, chapter 496 of the Acts of 1898, is well done, a student should be able to meet the requirements of these examinations.

The importance of a good record in the high school cannot be overestimated. The stronger the evidences of character, scholarship and promise, of whatever kind, he brings from his school and his teachers, especially from schools of high reputation and from teachers of good judgment and fearless expression, the greater confidence he may have in guarding himself against the contingencies of an examination and of satisfying the examiners of his fitness.

Reasonable allowance in equivalents will be made in case the candidate, for satisfactory reasons, has not taken a study named for examination.

The examinations are held at the main building, beginning at 9 A.M.; and lunch should be brought each day, on account of the distance of the school from the centre of the city.

Private examinations cannot be given.

COURSES OF STUDY.

The Regular Course.

The general course of study for two years shall comprise the following subjects: —

Psychology, history of education, principles of education, methods of instruction and discipline, school organization, school laws of Massachusetts, methods of teaching the following subjects: —

1. English, — reading, language, rhetoric, composition, literature, history.
2. Mathematics, — arithmetic, algebra, geometry.
3. Science, — elementary physics and chemistry, geography, physiology, study of minerals, plants and animals.
4. Drawing, vocal music, physical culture, manual training.

Observation and practice in the training school, and observation in other public schools.

The above is an enumeration of the studies; their order in the course, and the relative emphasis placed upon each, is determined by the principal of each school, with the approval of the Commissioner of Education.

It also needs to be stated that, while the foregoing list of subjects marks out the field covered in the school curriculum, it gives no adequate idea of the actual work done. It is made a special aim to seize every opportunity to give the pupils the benefit of whatever tends to fit them for the work of teaching.

The spirit of this endeavor pervades the whole school. It influences the mode and character of most of the exercises, and imparts to the whole work a tone and zest difficult to describe, but which determines whatever of distinctive character the normal school possesses.

In addition to the study of the theory of teaching, outlined above, a full year is given to practice in the schools of Worcester. This makes the regular course three years in length. Some students, however, who have taught successfully for a school year, may have the practice apprentice work, as outlined on page 13, remitted.

Elementary Course of Study for Two Years.

The elementary course of study is designed primarily for those who aim to teach in the first six grades of the public schools. It comprises substantially the following subjects: —

I. The study of the educational values of the following subjects and of the principles and methods of teaching them: —

(a) English, — reading, oral and written composition, grammar, English and American literature.

(b) Mathematics, arithmetic.

(c) History, — history and civics.

(d) Science, — elementary science, geography, physiology and hygiene.

(e) Drawing, vocal music, physical training, manual training.

II. (a) The study of psychology, for the principles of education; the study of the application of these principles in school organization, school government and in the art of teaching; the history of education; the school laws of Massachusetts.

(b) Observation and practice.

The time required for the completion of this course depends upon the student. In many cases more than two years are required. A diploma is given when the course is satisfactorily completed.

Special Course for College Graduates.

Students holding the degree of Bachelor of Arts or Bachelor of Science may, after passing the regular entrance examinations, enter at once upon a year's course in the principles and methods of teaching, to be followed by a six months' apprenticeship in the public schools of Worcester, under conditions highly favorable to the acquisition of practical skill in teaching, whether in grammar or high schools.

A One Year's Course for Experienced Teachers.

Teachers of successful experience in teaching, who bring satisfactory testimonials of maturity, good scholarship and of aptness to teach, may select a course, approved by the principal, which may be completed in one year, and when such a course is successfully completed they shall receive a certificate for the same.

Kindergarten-Primary Course.

The school now offers a kindergarten-primary course for those who desire to prepare themselves to teach in the kindergarten or first three primary grades. The requirements for admission are the same as for the general course, and, in addition, the ability to sing and play. The course includes in the first year a study of handwork and kindergarten materials, English, drawing, nature study and music; in the second and third years, kindergarten methods and theories, primary mathematics, reading, and actual teaching in the kindergarten and first three primary grades.

TUITION.

Tuition is free to residents of Massachusetts, but each non-resident pupil is required to pay a tuition fee of $25 at the beginning of each half-yearly session.

APPRENTICESHIP. — PRACTICE TEACHING.

Practice teaching takes the form of an apprenticeship at teaching in the public schools of the city. As Worcester has a population of about one hundred and forty thousand, and employs over six hundred teachers in its public schools, the field thus furnished for practice is ample.

After this preparation students are ready to take an active, though subordinate part in school management; and in the latter half of their second year they serve, without pay, as apprentices to the regular teachers. Each appointment is for about six weeks of four school days each, and there are three appointments during each half-year, beginning with the primary grades and ending with the grammar grades. Thus each student acquires an intimate knowledge of the whole range of the public schools below the high school.

On the part of the normal school, three of the staff, acting as supervisors, spend a considerable portion of their time in visiting apprentices. By observing teaching, examining written work, looking over lesson-plans and consulting with both apprentice and teacher, a good idea of the needs and progress of the apprentice is obtained, and suggestions and criticism are freely offered. The apprentice keeps a diary, which is given each week to a supervisor.

On Saturday, which is a school day at the normal school, the apprentice class is in attendance, and meets there each supervisor, who makes such general criticisms, explanations and suggestions as may have interest for, and application to the whole class. The rest of the time on Saturday the apprentice spends in preparing for her work, — consulting books and teachers, gathering material, and comparing notes and exchanging views with her classmates. This intercourse with each other brings the experience of the whole class before every member, and methods, devices and expedients are passed through a sort of clearing-house, where each may select what seems to her of value.

For those students who possess the requisite maturity and scholarship, assignments as apprentices in any of the three high schools of the city are made, where they are given such part in the instruction as they are able to undertake, and where they may receive training and practice not afforded by grammar schools. This enables the normal school authorities to offer a special course of a year and a half for college graduates, — a year of professional study and a half-year of apprenticeship, — with the entire school system of the city at their disposal.

In addition to the facilities for practice already described, the normal school has valuable privileges in two special schools, — the Washburn Memorial Hospital and the Worcester County Training School in Oakdale, a few miles from the city. At the Memorial Hospital there are often children who are detained there during convalescence, or who are undergoing long courses of treatment which would not interfere with their power of doing some kinds of school work if the conditions were properly controlled. To give these children some intellectual occupation and interest is, indeed, sometimes, to assist in their cure. For such the authorities at the hospital have arranged a schoolroom, and the normal school sends regularly two experienced apprentices, who conduct classes and give individual instruction. Since the children are of all ages and stages of advancement, the school becomes of necessity an ungraded one, and from its very nature presents exceptional conditions and children. The apprentice therefore receives training in a direction not permitted by her other work, and resource, adaptability, tact and teaching skill are developed in a way that supplements the regular training.

At the Training School the apprentice is received on the same terms as in the public schools of the city. She is under the direction of the superintendent and in the immediate charge of the teacher employed there. The difference, as may be inferred, is in having a class of boys to deal with who are exceptional in many ways. The experience of the apprentice in this school gives her good training in the exercise of her art, and special training in the management of a class of exceptional pupils.

In addition to the books in the reference library of the normal school, which are lent to the apprentices on the same terms as to the other pupils, there is a large and constantly increasing collection of material which is especially for the use of the apprentices. This comprises: (a) a special line of books useful in teaching, such as books on methods and devices, supplementary readers, collections of fairy tales and fables, historical stories, books on nature and nature study, and collections of music suitable for teaching rote-songs; (b) several hundred wall charts, illustrating natural history, the natural sciences, arts and manufactures, geography and methods of teaching such subjects as reading, writing and drawing; (c) about seven hundred pictures of birds and animals of all countries, mounted on cards, and large enough to be seen by a whole class; (d) collections of native animals, birds, insects, plants, woods, minerals, rocks, fossils and local manufactures; (e) maps, including political, topographical, relief models, outline blackboard stencils, outline maps on blackboard cloth, historical maps to illustrate the periods of discovery and of territorial growth, maps of campaigns and battles, and many others of special nature; (f) a collection of pictures of places of historic interest, of portraits of celebrated men and women, of types of fine architecture, painting and sculpture. Besides these collections, the school owns three duplicating machines, which the pupils are taught to use, and which enable the apprentices to print any number of copies of maps, drawings or notes on any subject of study, for the use of their pupils. All these things are made available by a card catalogue.

SCHOOL OF OBSERVATION.

The Elizabeth Street School, within a short distance of the normal school building, is now used by the State to supplement the apprentice system. Here selected teachers of the Worcester schools, who are also in the employ of the Commonwealth, are constantly exhibiting to the students of the normal school the art of teaching, in all details, in every grade from the kindergarten to the eighth. Pupils observe in groups of twelve. The teachers under observation during the school year present illustrations of practically every problem of elementary instruction. The stimulation and assistance afforded are of great value.

THE PLATFORM EXERCISE. — ORAL EXPRESSION.

This exercise consists chiefly of speaking for a few minutes, with or without notes, to the assembled school from the platform of the main hall. The range of topics is unlimited, and the choice in each case rests wholly with the student who gives the exercise.

It is quite significant that, notwithstanding its obviously trying character, the platform exercise is and has always been one of the two or three most valued that the school offers. Its popularity with the students grows with their growing maturity throughout the three years' course, and really culminates only when the graduates look back upon the exercise in after years. Their explicit testimony to this is unequivocal and almost unanimous.

The most striking evidence that this discipline accomplishes in a good degree the purpose for which it is maintained is afforded by the fact that each class in the school shows a distinct gain in precision, ease and effectiveness of speech over the class next below it; the seniors always taking the lead, and the pupils in their first term following at a long distance behind.

THE LIBRARY.

One of the most valuable qualifications of a teacher is an alert mind, in touch with the world of books and alive with interest in the important events of the day. The possession of the reading habit, combined with discriminating judgment and taste, is most desirable for every teacher. No pains are spared to make all conditions favorable for cultivation in this direction. Books, magazines and newspapers are not only made easily accessible, but they are constantly brought to the attention of the school as a whole by talks from teachers, by references in class work and by interviews with individual students.

Books are constantly added to the reference library, which consists of about eight thousand carefully selected volumes. The "new book table," where the accessions are first placed, is a most inviting place for any reader. Magazines and newspapers are abundantly supplied in an attractive reading room always open to the school. Here the card catalogue is placed, and a bulletin board where clippings are posted. Talks on books and reading are frequently given by the members of the faculty and by speakers invited to come to the school for this purpose. Many of the books given out in classes as text-books are of such a character as to deserve for them a place on the shelves of the reference library also. The superior character of books used in classes in professional subjects, in history, literature, hygiene and other fields makes the future teacher familiar with the best books.

Training in the right reading of good newspapers is also persistently carried on through a committee of students, which is also organized as a clipping bureau.

Each student has practice in library work, acting as librarian of a collection of books. The whole reference library is taken care of in this way by members of the school, who work under the instruction and direction of one of the teachers. In this way students learn how to safeguard books in their own schools later, when as teachers they become responsible for school libraries, or for books lent by public libraries for the home reading of children.

Text-books are given out, recorded and finally collected at the end of the term by "class librarians." In this and in other ways methods are used capable of modification to meet the needs of the student when she becomes a teacher.

STODDARD TERRACE.

This building is a dormitory, built on the cottage plan, for the accommodation of about thirty girls. It is heated by steam and lighted by electricity, has a comfortable parlor and an attractive music room, and is, in every way, a convenient and satisfactory school home.

Here are all the necessary appliances for cooking and a spacious dining room. The price for board, fixed for all the normal schools in the State, is $160 for the school year, payable in advance, $40 in September, $40 on November 15, $40 on February 1, and $40 on April 15.

The house is in charge of a matron. Pupils whose homes are not in Worcester are advised to live at the dormitory.

LUNCH ROOM.

This year pupils and teachers have been glad to avail themselves of the opportunity to get their mid-day meal at Stoddard Terrace, where a substantial luncheon is furnished them. Rooms have been fitted up for this purpose, and on the days of largest attendance seventy-five or more persons assembled in them.

The rest of the pupils eat the lunch they have brought from home in the school lunch room. Here a hot closet makes it possible to warm food or drink, as desired, and boiling water is supplied for the making of cocoa.

GENERAL INFORMATION.

Hygiene.

No pupil is allowed to enter the school who is not able to pass a physical examination, and no pupil is allowed to remain whose physical condition is not thought equal to the demands of the school work. Special efforts are made to counteract any tendency to overwork, over-excitement or hurry. No recitations or study periods are longer than forty minutes, and during the ample and frequent intervals of relaxation school work is completely put aside.

Systematic instruction is given in the elementary and fundamental facts of anatomy, physiology and hygiene. The physical life of the child is regarded as a subject of great importance. Under this subject such topics as growth, ventilation, food, fatigue, eyestrain, dental hygiene, adenoids, etc., are studied in relation to the physical and mental development of the school child. Some instruction is given relative to the aims and methods of teaching hygiene in the public schools.

The personal hygiene talks aim to connect very closely with the students' lives, to conform to what their habits show they need to be taught.

Every pupil is required to take the regular courses in physical training.

The purpose of the department is to aid the student in forming good physical habits, to increase his endurance and physical efficiency, to train him to become a serviceable worker in the school and on the playground.

The outdoor work includes relay races, jump rope and hoop work, stilts and the usual plays and games of children, besides ice and field hockey, cricket, scrub, tennis, playground dances, etc.

Interclass matches at cricket, volley ball, battle ball, etc., are held; game days, May-pole dances and folk-dance exhibits are given.

The School Garden.

In furtherance of the courses in nature study and manual training the pupils maintain a school garden. Although the area is not large, by division of labor every pupil comes to have some first-hand knowledge of plants and some skill in caring for them.

They raise the common vegetables and flowers, — the things they will find best adapted for the gardens they will some day supervise as teachers. Their attention is directed to the possibilities of gardening even in the thickly settled portions of the city, and they are encouraged to plant seeds at home.

During the winter months window boxes in the various rooms of the school building furnish opportunity for indoor gardening.

Employment of Graduates.

The location of the graduates in schools of their own is accomplished almost wholly through the agency of this school. Many members of a senior class receive offers of positions before the close of the school year from superintendents who visit the school for the purpose of securing teachers to fill impending vacancies.

The school keeps in touch with the recent graduates and has on file a record of their work since graduation. From this list recommendations are made to superintendents who are in search of teachers of experience. Every year circulars seeking information concerning their present positions are sent to those graduates who are not teaching under a permanent system of advancement, as in most city schools. Thus most graduates of the school obtain their first charges, and many receive one or more offers of advancement at a later time, through the mediation of the school.

Scholarships at Harvard.

There are four scholarships in the scientific school of Harvard University for the benefit of graduates of the State normal schools. The annual value of each of these scholarships is $150, which is the price of tuition, so that the holder of the scholarship gets his tuition free.

The incumbents are originally appointed for one year, on the recommendation of the principals of the schools from which they have been severally graduated. These appointments may be annually renewed, on the recommendation of the faculty of the scientific school.

Leave of Absence.

It is often the case that, through weak health or stress of circumstances, pupils may be obliged to miss one, two, three or more terms. It is in the interest of such that the course need not be pursued uninterruptedly to the end. Students may, and often do, obtain leave of absence to teach or to rest, and resume their work afterwards. This divides but does not shorten their course of study.

State Aid.

The Commonwealth has regularly appropriated several hundred dollars a year to each of its normal schools, to be divided among such pupils as are most needy and deserving. This school receives its proper share of such funds, and is able to render assistance to a number of students each year. Aid is not furnished during the first term of attendance. Applications for this aid are to be made to the principal, in writing, and must be accompanied by such evidence as shall satisfy him that the applicant needs the aid.

The State also gives the use of all the text-books required in the course, as well as free access to an ample and well-selected library of reference and general literature.

Incidental Advantages.

Important facilities for general improvement are offered to pupils in the libraries, institutions and other means of culture in which Worcester is rich.

The extensive and well-arranged museum of the Worcester Natural History Society is open for inspection, and specimens in all departments can be borrowed by teachers and students, and taken to the school for purposes of study and illustration.

The hall of the American Antiquarian Society contains a notably rich store of interesting exhibits, and the library includes a rare treasury of books pertaining to American history.

The free public library stands high among the institutions of the kind in this country, for the effective relationship existing between it and the schools. Its large and well-endowed reference library, its well-filled circulating department, its reading rooms, supplied with the leading domestic and foreign papers and periodicals, afford exceptional opportunities to the schools. Special facilities are offered to teachers and pupils, and the librarian is unsparing in his efforts to render every aid in the choice and use of books or in any way in which he can assist the reader.

The Worcester Art Museum is to be added to the foregoing list.

Railroad Fares. — The many lines of railroad and trolley cars centering in Worcester afford easy communication with the neighboring towns and villages. Season tickets or mileage tickets are issued by the railroads to pupils of the normal school at greatly reduced rates, and the daily sessions of the school are so arranged as to accommodate those who wish to come and go by the cars.

TO SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS.

Every year, in the months of April and May, our senior class is approaching the time of its graduation in June. The class usually includes from sixty to seventy members, mostly young women, about twenty-two years of age. These students, after having graduated from high schools, have spent three years in special study and practice, under our instruction and supervision, to fit themselves to teach in the public schools of this Commonwealth. All of them have given, in the schoolroom, good evidence of ability to teach. Their apprenticeship in carefully selected public schools of this city has afforded opportunity not only to acquire good methods of teaching, but also to gain considerable command of the art of school management and discipline. They are therefore capable of taking at once positions of some responsibility.

Superintendents in search of teachers like to see candidates and talk with them, and candidates on their part like to learn something about the positions they are asked to take. So it has come about that an increasing number of superintendents visit the school during the months above named, and have personal interviews with members of the senior class with reference to probable vacancies to occur in the autumn. We are always ready to afford opportunity for such interviews, as well as to furnish any information that may help to make engagements mutally advantageous. Thus it happens that a certain proportion of our most promising seniors are engaged to teach before graduation day arrives, and during the ensuing summer are making preparation for their work.

GRADUATES' ASSOCIATION.

The graduate body is so large that the expense of printing their names for the annual catalogue is no longer justified. It is proposed to publish the entire list but once in five years; in the intervening issues only such changes in names and addresses as have been reported during the year will appear. The latest class of graduates will be printed each year, the list of Class Secretaries, the officers of the Graduates' Association and the dates of all Class Reunions.

State Normal School at Worcester.

AIM AND PURPOSE OF THE SCHOOL.

The Board of Education, by a vote passed May 6, 1880, stated the design of the school and the course of studies for the State normal schools as follows: —

The design of the normal school is strictly professional; that is, to prepare in the best possible manner the pupils for the work of organizing, governing and teaching the public schools of the Commonwealth.

To this end there must be the most thorough knowledge: first, of the branches of learning required to be taught in the schools; second, of the best methods of teaching these branches; and third, of right mental training.

Candidates for admission to a Massachusetts State Normal School must have attained the age of seventeen years, if young men, and sixteen years, if young women; must be free from diseases or infirmities which would unfit them for the office of teacher; and must present certificates of good moral character. They must also submit detailed records of scholarship from the principal of the high school, or other school in which preparation has been made, showing the amount of time given to individual subjects and the grade therein, and such additional evidence of qualifications for the calling of a teacher as the Board of Education may require.

II. A candidate for admission as a regular student to a general course must present a diploma of graduation from a high school, or its equivalent, and, in addition, offer by examination or certificate satisfactory evidence of preparation in the following subjects for a total of 14 units. A unit represents a year's study in any subject in a secondary school, constituting approximately one-quarter of a full year's work.

A. Prescribed Subjects. — Three units.

(1) English literature and composition, . . . 3 units.

B. Elective Subjects. — At least 7 units from the following subjects: —

(2)	Algebra,	1 unit.
(3)	Geometry,	1 unit.
(4)	History,	1 or 2 units.
(5)	Latin,	2 to 4 units.
(6)	French,	2 or 3 units.
(7)	German,	2 or 3 units.
(8)	Drawing,[1]	1 unit.
(9)	Physics,	1 unit.
(10)	Chemistry,	1 unit.
(11)	Biology, botany or zoölogy,[1]	1 unit.
(12)	Physical geography,[1]	1 unit.
(13)	Physiology and hygiene,[1]	1 unit.
(14)	Stenography,	1 or 2 units.
(15)	Domestic science or manual training,	1 unit.
(16)	Commercial geography,[1]	1 unit.
(17)	Arithmetic,[1]	1 unit.
(18)	Bookkeeping,	1 unit.

For the present, the topics included within the foregoing subjects will be such as are usually accepted by Massachusetts colleges for entrance. The outlines submitted by the College Entrance Examinations Board (Substation 84, New York City) will be found suggestive by high schools.

C. Additional Subjects. — At least 4 units from any of the foregoing subjects, or from other subjects approved by the secondary school towards the diploma of graduation of the applicant. Work in any subject approved for graduation, in addition to that for which credit is secured by examination or certification may count towards these 4 units.

III. Examinations. — Each applicant for admission, unless exempted by the provisions of sections IV. and V., must pass entrance examinations required under "A" and "B." Examinations in these subjects will be held at each of the normal schools in June and September of each year. Candidates applying for admission by examination must present credentials or certificates from their schools to cover the requirements under "C," and will not be given examinations in these subjects.

[1] Half units in these subjects will also be accepted.

IV. Division of Examinations. — Candidates for admission to the normal schools may take all of the examinations at once, or divide them between June and September. If the examinations are divided, the candidate will receive no credit for the first examination, unless he secures by examination or certification a total of at least 5 of the 10 units required. Examinations cannot be divided between different years.

V. Admission on Certificates. — Candidates from public high schools which are on the certificate list of the New England College Entrance Certificate Board may be exempted by the principal of the normal school from examination in any of the subjects under "A" and "B" in which the principal of the high school shall certify that the applicant, in accordance with the practice of the high school, is entitled to certification to a college in the New England College Certificate Board. Candidates from public high schools approved for this purpose by the Board of Education may be exempted by the principal of the normal school from examination in any subjects under "A" and "B" in which the applicant has a record of B, or 80 per cent., in the last year in which such subject has been pursued, and when the principal of the high school states that the work of the applicant entitles him to certification. Credits secured by any candidate from the Board of Regents of the State of New York, or for admission to any college in the New England College Certificate Board, either by examination or certification, or in the examinations of the College Entrance Examination Board, shall be accepted towards the total of 10 units under "A" and "B." In addition to units granted by certification candidates must present credentials for subjects under "C."

VI. Admission as Special Students. — Graduates of normal schools and colleges and persons with satisfactory experience in teaching may be admitted as special students to all courses, under such regulations as the Board may prescribe. Applicants with satisfactory teaching experience may be admitted to the one year's course without examination or other requirements.

VII. Admission to Special Courses. — Persons possessing qualifications for the pursuit of work offered in special courses may be admitted as special students under such regulations as the Board may prescribe.

DETAILS OF ADMISSION SUBJECTS.

I. — English.

The list of books for study prescribed by the Commission of Colleges in New England for 1911–15 is as follows: Shakespeare's Macbeth; Milton's Minor Poems or Tennyson's Gareth and Lynette, Lancelot and Elaine and The Passing of Arthur; Burke's Speech on Conciliation with America, or Washington's Farewell Address and Webster's First Bunker Hill Oration; Macaulay's Life of Johnson or Carlyle's Essay on Burns.

The purpose of the examination is to discover, (1) whether the student has acquired a good habit of study, (2) whether he has formed any standards of literary judgment, (3) whether he has become discerning of literary merit, and (4) what acquaintance he has with standard English and American writers.

The examination will take such a form that students who have followed other than the prescribed lines of reading may be able to satisfy the examiners on the above points.

In addition, the candidate may be required to answer questions involving the essentials of English grammar, and questions on the leading facts in those periods of English history to which the prescribed works belong.

II. — Mathematics.

(a) The elements of algebra through affected quadratic equations.

(b) The elements of plane geometry, including original work, both with theorems and problems.

III. — History.

The examination calls for a knowledge of one or more of these histories: ancient, mediæval and modern, English or American, the last-named including civics.

IV. — Drawing.

Mechanical and freehand drawing, enough to enable the candidate to draw a simple object, like a box or a pyramid or a cylinder, with plan and elevation to scale, and to make a freehand sketch of the same in perspective. Also, any one of the three topics, — form, color and arrangement.

V. — Sciences.

Physics, chemistry, biology, botany or zoölogy, physical geography, physiology and hygiene may be offered. A general course, including laboratory work and covering one year, should furnish satisfactory preparation.

VI. — Additional Subjects.

Stenography, domestic science, manual training, commercial geography, arithmetic and bookkeeping may also be offered. The examination, however, will in each case presuppose at least a year's study.

Note. — It may be said in general, that, if the ordinary work of a good statutory high school, as defined by section 2, chapter 496 of the Acts of 1898, is well done, a student should be able to meet the requirements of these examinations. In this connection, the importance of a good record in the high school cannot be overestimated.

The examinations are held at the main building, beginning at 8.30 A.M.; and lunch should be brought each day, on account of the distance of the school from the centre of the city.

Private examinations cannot be given.

VI. The Teachers' Course.

This course of one year is offered to meet the needs of teachers of not less than three years of successful teaching, who recognize the need of professional training and desire to fit themselves for more efficient service in the elementary school by a better acquaintance with psychology and the principles and methods of teaching. Opportunity is granted, too, for study along the lines of special need and aptitude.

THE COURSES OF INSTRUCTION — THEIR AIMS AND SCOPE.

Educational and Child Psychology.

The fundamental aim of this course is to give the students a sympathetic and practical knowledge of child life. Since such knowledge is a prerequisite for every course in method, the study of psychology begins as soon as the student enters school and extends through one-half of the first year, with a review and slightly more professional treatment later in the course. The study of every topic in psychology is first considered with reference to the student's own self. This is done through the class experiment or by leading the students to consider their own past experiences. A transition is then made to child psychology. Members of the class are led to recall reminiscences of their childhood and are encouraged to make careful and frequent observations of children. Text-books are assigned and special reading is required. The subject-matter of psychology is carefully selected, only that which has some ultimate connection with practical problems of the schoolroom being chosen.

Principles of Education and School Management.

The work in this department comprises the following divisions: (a) general pedagogy: a study of the nature and the aim of the school, with special consideration of the learning process, the methods of study and of teaching pupils how to study; (b) principles of educational practice: including the meaning and function of education, the aims of education, the educational values of the school studies, the formation of the curriculum, and the relations of educational development to attention, interest, perception, apperception, memory, judgment and habit; (c) scientific method: an investigation of the teaching process, with a view to learning the principles underlying it and to observing their application in teaching elementary school subjects; (d) school and classroom management: consideration and discussion of the problems of control and discipline, leading to an appreciation of the philosophy of management and to the establishment of definite principles of government and supervision.

This work is supplemented by semiweekly periods of observation of classwork in the Elizabeth Street School (see page 30), and thus prepares the pupil with the aid of that observation directly for the later apprenticeship in the public schools of the city.

History of Education.

The goal of this course is the explanation of present-day practices and problems in education in the light of the past. The first few lessons are devoted to a general survey of educational conditions to-day. The next step is to go back historically to the study of education in the middle ages. The development of education from that time down to the present is briefly traced. Comparison between the past and present is frequently made. The purpose throughout is to discover the sources of our modern educational ideals, theories, methods, institutions and problems. Particular emphasis is put on the history of education in Massachusetts.

Hygiene.

The field covered in this course is general hygiene. It is designed to arouse in pupils an appreciation of the value of good health and to offer suggestions as to how one may preserve and improve his health. School hygiene and the problem of teaching hygiene to children are carefully considered. Enough anatomy and physiology are taught to enable students to comprehend the principles of hygiene. Text-books are used and frequent reference is made to current books and periodicals.

Rural Education.

This course is intended to give the students, most of whom are city-bred, an acquaintance with the problems of rural life that will make them more sympathetic as well as more intelligent teachers of the country schools where they will all begin their work. Carney's "Country Life and the Country School" is made the basis of the course, but all the recent books on this subject are supplied for reference.

Each student is required to spend a day in each one of the three types of country schools to be found in the neighborhood of Worcester: the one-room district school of the scattered farming community, usually of few pupils; the larger school of perhaps two rooms in the mill village; and the consolidated school at the centre of the town with four or six rooms to which the pupils are transported from the outlying districts. Reports are made of the lighting, heating, ventilation, the outbuildings, dressing-rooms, condition of the school yard, the water supply and its care, the use of the noon hour, etc. All schools visited are located by the students upon a map prepared for the purpose.

In addition to the regular class work talks are given to the class at intervals by persons experienced in this type of education, such as successful country teachers, superintendents and other rural workers. Collections are also made of photographs of rural school buildings, sites and playgrounds.

Nature Study.

The course in nature study has two ends in view: to prepare the pupil for the nature work in the public schools, and to increase her enjoyment of nature through sharpened observation. It runs through a year and a half, and each phase of it is supplemented by outdoor excursions.

In the first term the tree is studied as being the largest plant form and the most common in the city. Collections of leaves of the native and more common trees are made and the fruits observed. Attention is given to the autumn color display, and the evergreens are studied at the Christmas season. During the winter months the bare trees are learned through bark, shape, branching, leaf scars and buds. A study of the various woods follows with something of the principles and practice of forestry.

In the spring the wild flowers and birds keep the class well occupied, but each member does, also, some work in the school garden, which is cared for entirely by them.

In the third term comes the insect study which has for its purpose making the student acquainted with the common insects, with especial attention to insect pests. The pedagogy of the subject is given a prominent place in the work, dealing with the special methods and devices of teaching nature; lesson plans are made and courses of study are considered. Considerable attention is given also to the literature of nature, for the purpose of familiarizing the student with authorities, various texts and the best available material on the subject.

English.

The work in English aims to establish first a foundation in the clear understanding of the meaning, structure and function of good literature. This involves an analytical study of standard authors to gain a knowledge of the forms of prose composition, and this knowledge is applied in frequent themes. Following this introduction there is a thorough consideration of the principles underlying the teaching of English in the elementary school and a study of the methods of teaching reading, phonics, language, grammar and elementary literature. Discussion of the problems arising under the curriculum is made a part of the work, especially as they are observed at the Elizabeth Street School, where the students have regular opportunities of seeing model lessons taught in the subject.

Geography.

The work in geography opens with a study of the physiographic basis, the emphasis being placed on the wind belts, the resulting climatic regions and the land forms of the first magnitude. This is followed by an application of the principles to the United States, South America and to the nations of Europe. During the first half of the middle year the work is a detailed discussion of a course of study (proposed course of study in geography for rural schools) and of methods of presentation and development, with the object of preparing the class for practice teaching. A half year with the senior class is used to round out the subject-matter. This work is partly inspirational, but mostly it has reference to the broad field of knowledge which is essential for the teacher of geography in any grade.

History and Civics.

The purpose of the course is twofold. First, it is to put the young teacher in the way of understanding the world of events about her and how the valuable things in this world of events have come to us. To accomplish this each student joins a current events' class, reading the periodicals and newspapers, taking notes and participating in discussions. She also joins a class in citizenship where she learns of the place of citizenship and government in the individual and community life of to-day. She also is a member of the history class where she studies anew the story of her country, its growth and its achievements. Second, it is to put the young teacher in a position of one who wishes to help children and beginners learn how to be intelligent members of society. This is the learning how to teach history and citizenship well, so that the child in each year of his development will have the greatest interest, pleasure and gain from being a good citizen, and from being a good learner from citizens of earlier times, that is, from the story of his country. This includes study of graded courses of study, aims of history teaching, methods of teaching in different grades, lesson planning, collecting children's books and illustrative material, visiting schools and public institutions and observation of actual classroom work.

Practical Science.

In the first part of the course a careful study is made of those raw materials and phenomena of nature which have their practical application in the industries and the arts. It is planned with reference to the courses of study commonly followed in the elementary schools, and is concerned with an investigation and comprehension of the principles and laws of nature and their adaptation to the needs of life, as a basis for making the teaching of the subject most helpful. It includes such subjects as the common commercial stones of the region, sand and clay, their formation and uses in manufacture; metals, their production, properties and uses; electricity, its forms and many applications; fuels and the general subject of heat and combustion;

fibres, textiles, etc. The work is closely correlated with the local industries, and their investigation, from the teacher's point of view, is made to yield valuable pedagogic training. In the latter part of the course attention is given to sanitary and applied chemistry, with especial emphasis upon the hygienic bearing of the subject. The study of the atmosphere, for instance, includes ventilation, humidity, the testing of air in schoolrooms, heating, cleaning and the prevention of air-borne contagions. In the study of food and nutrition the attempt is made to furnish the student with an intelligent basis for the ordering of her own life, as well as such knowledge as will lead her to be alert and efficient in dealing with her pupils. This part of the course is closely articulated with that in school hygiene.

Mathematics.

In this subject the aim is to make clear and fix in the minds of students the principles and processes of subject-matter and methods of teaching. The subject is developed through observation, investigation and reasoning wherever possible. In other cases information is made real by connecting facts with their uses in life. Modern business customs are followed in the applications of arithmetic. Geometry is studied from the point of view of applied measurement. Algebra is used to make general principles clearer. The time given to algebra is for the purpose of preparing to teach its elements. The mind of the student is led to grasp relations, to see the unity of the subject, to rely upon principles, to use judgment and to feel confidence in her results.

Drawing.

The course in drawing is based on the belief that the individual develops much as the race has developed, and that this subject can, therefore, have no vital part in the life of the child unless he is brought to see the need of it in planning for things to be made and used. Consequently, provision is made in it for planning, making and decorating in direct relation to needs. Color is studied in order to help one to dress in becoming ways and to decorate the home tastefully, and similarly a purpose or a need determines the time, character and form of the study of design, modelling and drawing whether it be free-hand, pencil, charcoal, perspective, water-color or other type of work. The scientific study of the problem involved precedes and is then supplemented by the practical applications of the principles to concrete planning and construction and decoration.

Manual Arts.

This work is not wholly separable from the work in drawing, but in large measure grows out of the study of the principles of color, design, representation and construction, and where possible working drawings are made the basis of it. Relations of form or of color or of proportion are kept prominently in mind, and attention is given to the many common applications of theory to costume, furniture, architecture, landscape gardening, decoration, etc. As time will permit, some study is given to the following different kinds of manual work: embroidery, paper-folding, weaving, basketry, cord-work, stencilling, printing, bookbinding, box-making, furniture making and laying out of gardens.

Music.

The music course aims to give the pupil: (a) a general knowledge of the subject, including the principles of correct production, practice in ear-training, sight-reading and writing of melodies; (b) an acquaintance with the pedagogical methods of teaching these same things in the elementary school, as well as with the preparation of a course of study in music; (c) a repertoire of rote-songs suitable for use in the first three grades; (d) training in choral singing of part-songs; and (e) a deeper appreciation of the meaning, beauty and power of good music.

Physical Training and Playground Supervision.

The training in this department continues throughout the course, and its purpose is twofold: first to aid the student to form good physical habits and to promote her personal efficiency by intelligent attention to the laws of health and hygiene; and second, to train her to become a capable worker in school gymnastics or calisthenics and in playground supervision. To these ends special indoor and outdoor exercises, games and dances are used according to the season or the needs of the students or the stage of the course. The indoor work includes marching, drills, fancy steps, folk and social dancing, exercises with wands, bells, clubs, balls of all kinds, fixed apparatus of Swedish, German and American types, and the calisthenic exercises of the schoolroom. The outdoor work includes relay races, jump-rope and hoop work, stilts and the usual plays and games of children, besides ice and field hockey, coasting, tobogganing, cricket, scrub, tennis, playground dances, volley ball, battle ball, captain ball, nine court basket ball and baseball. Special training in the application and supervision of these exercises in school playground work is given by interclass matches and field days arranged at various times during the year, and also by the exceptional opportunities afforded by the apprenticeship in the Worcester schools and by experience as playground workers both in Worcester and in other cities and towns. It is supplemented by study of courses of instruction, of plans of playgrounds and of equipment of the playground and gymnasium.

Kindergarten.

The work in this department is designed to prepare for kindergarten teaching and may be taken as a course by itself or be combined with preparation for primary teaching (see pages 16 and 18). Besides the study of psychology, nature study, English, drawing and number, the course includes handwork, the study of kindergarten materials, their meaning and their use, Froebelian materials, songs and games, kindergarten methods and theories, study of kindergarten story material and the history of children's literature, the making of programs, the historical development of the infant-school and kindergarten movements, with special emphasis upon modern ideals and tendencies, and readings from Froebel. Considerable observation of kindergarten work and kindergarten organization is included in the course both before and after the practice teaching, which is done in the kindergartens of the city of Worcester. In addition to the regular admission requirements to the normal school, students of this department must have a considerable proficiency in piano-playing and in singing.

APPRENTICESHIP.

Practice teaching takes the form of an apprenticeship at teaching in the public schools of the city. As Worcester has a population of over one hundred and fifty thousand, and employs over seven hundred teachers in its public schools, the field thus furnished for practice is ample. The students serve, without pay, as apprentices to the regular teachers, taking an active part in the class management and having regularly a valuable teaching experience during a considerable portion of the time. Each appointment is for about six weeks of four school days each, and from three to six appointments are made, according to the course taken. The practice-work covers both the primary grades and the grammar grades, and thus each student acquires an intimate knowledge of the whole range of the public schools below the high school.

On the part of the normal school three members of the faculty act as supervisors of the apprentices, observing their teaching, examining their written work, directing the making of lesson-plans, and having frequent conferences with them and with the teachers as well. In this way the needs of the individual apprentice are known and met, and her progress is promoted by means of suggestions and criticisms which are freely offered. The apprentice herself is trained to observe and criticize her own development and her actual work in the classroom by keeping a diary which is submitted for criticism each week to the head supervisor.

On Saturday, which is a school day at the normal school, the apprentice class is in attendance and meets each supervisor, and occasionally the principal, for general class discussions, as well as criticisms, explanations and suggestions that relate to the problems of the apprenticeship. Some time and special directions are also given to the preparation of new work, — such matters as consulting books and teachers, gathering material and comparing notes and exchanging views with other apprentices. Discussions of this kind bring the experience of the whole class before every member, and the different methods, devices and expedients used are passed through a sort of clearing-house, where each may select what seems to her of value.

In addition to the facilities for practice already described, the normal school has valuable privileges in a special school, the Worcester County Training School in Oakdale, a few miles from the city. Here the apprentice is received on the same terms as in the public schools of the city. She is under the direction of the superintendent and in the immediate charge of the teacher employed there. The difference, as may be inferred, is in having a class of boys to deal with who are exceptional in many ways. This experience in the management of a special type of pupil gives training in a direction not permitted by her other work, and develops the resourcefulness, adaptability, tact and teaching skill of the apprentice in a very valuable way.

Besides the books in the reference library of the normal school, which are loaned to the apprentices on the same terms as to the other pupils, there is a large and constantly increasing collection of material which is especially for the use of the apprentices. This comprises: (a) a special line of books useful in teaching, such as books on methods and devices, supplementary readers, collections of fairy tales and fables, historical stories, books on nature and nature study, and collections of music suitable for teaching rote-songs; (b) several hundred wall charts, illustrating natural history, the natural sciences, arts and manufactures, geography and methods of teaching such subjects as reading, writing and drawing; (c) about seven hundred pictures of birds and animals of all countries, mounted on cards, and large enough to be seen by a whole class; (d) collections of native animals, birds, insects, plants, woods, minerals, rocks, fossils and local manufactures; (e) maps, including political, topographical, relief models, outline blackboard stencils, outline maps on blackboard cloth, historical maps to illustrate the periods of discovery and of territorial growth, maps of campaigns and battles, and many others of special nature; (f) a collection of pictures of places of historic interest, of portraits of celebrated men and women, of types of fine architecture, painting and sculpture. Besides these collections, the school owns three duplicating machines, which the pupils are taught to use, and which enable the apprentices to print any number of copies of maps, drawings or notes on any subject of study, for the use of their pupils. All these things are made available by a card catalogue.

OBSERVATION.

(a) The model primary department in charge of a trained and very efficient superintendent is used as a school for observation, where throughout the course the students have opportunity for regular visitation and observation of teaching in the first three grades. They are given careful preparatory instruction in the points valuable to observe, reports of their work are made, and regular discussions in classes are held by the superintendent for the purpose of criticism, explanation and further instruction.

(b) The Elizabeth Street School, one of the city elementary schools, within a short distance of the normal school building, is also used by the State to supplement the apprentice system. Here selected teachers of the Worcester schools, who are also in the employ of the Commonwealth, exhibit to the students of the normal school, who observe in groups, the art of teaching in all details in every grade, from the kindergarten to the eighth. The teachers under observation present during the school year illustrations of practically every problem of elementary instruction, including not only those of general methods, but also those of special methods as applied in the teaching of the particular subjects of the elementary course. The observation of the applications of general methods is in charge of the supervisors of apprentices, and that of the applications of special methods is under the direction of the teachers of the several departments. It is obvious that the stimulus and assistance afforded by this work are of great value.

ORAL EXPRESSION.

During the term of apprenticeship, a special opportunity for training in oral expression is provided by a weekly platform exercise. This exercise consists chiefly of speaking for a few minutes, with or without notes, to the assembled school from the platform of the main hall. The range of topics is unlimited, and the choice in each case rests wholly with the student who gives the exercise.

It is quite significant that, notwithstanding its obviously trying character, the platform exercise is and has always been one of the two or three most valued that the school offers. Its popularity with the students grows with their growing maturity throughout the course, and really culminates only when the graduates look back upon the exercise in after years. Their explicit testimony to this fact is unequivocal and almost unanimous.

The most striking evidence that this discipline accomplishes in a good degree the purpose for which it is maintained is afforded by the fact that each class in the school shows a distinct gain in precision, ease and effectiveness of speech over the class next below it; the seniors always taking the lead, and the pupils in their first term following at a long distance behind.

THE LIBRARY.

One of the most valuable qualifications of a teacher is an alert mind, in touch with the world of books and alive with interest in the important events of the day, and the possession of the reading habit, combined with discriminating judgment and taste. No pains are spared to make all conditions favorable for cultivation in this direction. Books, magazines and newspapers are not only made easily accessible, but they are constantly brought to the attention of the school as a whole by talks from teachers, by references in class work and by interviews with individual students.

Books are constantly added to the reference library, which consists of about eight thousand carefully selected volumes. The "new book table," where the accessions are first placed, is a most inviting place for any reader. Magazines and newspapers are abundantly supplied in an attractive reading room always open to the school. Here the card catalogue is placed, and a bulletin board where clippings are posted. Talks on books and reading are frequently given by the members of the faculty and by speakers invited to come to the school for this purpose. Many of the books given out in classes as text-books are of such a character as to deserve for them a place on the shelves of the reference library also. The superior character of books used in classes in professional subjects, in history, literature, hygiene and other fields makes the future teacher familiar with the best books.

Training in the right reading of good newspapers is also persistently carried on through a committee of students, which is also organized as a clipping bureau.

Each student has practice in library work, acting as librarian of a collection of books. The whole reference library is taken care of in this way by members of the school, who work under the instruction and direction of one of the teachers. In this way students learn how to safeguard books in their own schools later, when as teachers they become responsible for school libraries, or for books loaned by public libraries for the home reading of children.

Text-books are given out, recorded and finally collected at the end of the term by "class librarians." In this and in other ways methods are used which with modification will serve to meet the needs of the student when she becomes a teacher.

STODDARD TERRACE, THE SCHOOL DORMITORY.

STODDARD TERRACE.

This building is a dormitory, built on the cottage plan, for the accommodation of about twenty girls. It is heated by steam and lighted by electricity, has a comfortable parlor and an attractive music room, and is, in every way, a convenient and satisfactory school home.

Here are all the necessary appliances for cooking and a spacious dining room. The price for room and board, together with a limited amount of laundry, is $160 for the school year, payable in advance, — $40 in September, $40 on November 15, $40 on February 1, and $40 on April 15. These rates are fixed for all the normal schools in the State.

The house is in charge of a competent and experienced matron and an efficient house-mother. Pupils whose homes are not in Worcester are advised to live at the dormitory.

LUNCH ROOM.

For the special convenience of pupils and teachers who care to avail themselves of the opportunity, a substantial hot luncheon is furnished at Stoddard Terrace at the very moderate price of 20 cents. Rooms have been fitted up expressly for this purpose, and on the days of largest attendance seventy-five or more persons are accommodated.

The rest of the pupils eat the lunch they have brought from home in the school lunch room. Here many of the necessary furnishings are provided; a hot closet makes it possible to warm food or drink, as desired, and boiling water is supplied for the making of cocoa.

GENERAL INFORMATION.

Tuition.

Tuition is free to residents of Massachusetts, but each non-resident pupil is required to pay a tuition fee of $25 at the beginning of each half-yearly session.

Physical Examination.

Every pupil who is admitted to the school is required to have a physical examination, and no pupil is allowed to remain whose physical condition is not found to be equal to the demands of the school work. Special efforts are made to counteract any tendency to overwork, over-excitement or hurry. Recitations or study periods are not longer than forty minutes, and during the ample and frequent intervals of relaxation school work is completely put aside. Systematic instruction is also given in hygiene and physical training, which has been described above (page 26).

The School Garden.

In furtherance of the courses in nature study and manual training the pupils maintain a school garden. Although the area is not large, by division of labor every pupil comes to have some first-hand knowledge of plants and some skill in caring for them.

They raise the common vegetables and flowers, — the things they will find best adapted for the gardens they will some day supervise as teachers. Their attention is directed to the possibilities of gardening even in the thickly settled portions of the city, and they are encouraged to plant seeds at home.

During the winter months window boxes in the various rooms of the school building furnish opportunity for indoor gardening.

Employment of Graduates.

The location of the graduates in schools of their own is accomplished almost wholly through the agency of this school. Many members of a senior class receive offers of positions before the close of the school year from superintendents who visit the school for the purpose of securing teachers to fill impending vacancies.

The school keeps in touch with the recent graduates and has on file a record of their work since graduation. From this list recommendations are made to superintendents who are in search of teachers of experience. Every year circulars seeking information concerning their present positions are sent to those graduates who are not teaching under a permanent system of advancement, as in most city schools. Thus most graduates of the school obtain their first charges, and many receive one or more offers of advancement at a later time, through the mediation of the school.

Scholarships at Harvard.

There are four scholarships in the scientific school of Harvard University for the benefit of graduates of the State normal schools. The annual value of each of these scholarships is $150, which is the price of tuition, so that the holder of the scholarship gets his tuition free.

The incumbents are originally appointed for one year, on the recommendation of the principals of the schools from which they have been severally graduated. These appointments may be annually renewed, on the recommendation of the faculty of the scientific school.

Leave of Absence.

It is often the case that, through weak health or stress of circumstances, pupils may be obliged to miss one, two, three or more terms. It is in the interest of such that the course need not be pursued uninterruptedly to the end. Students may, and often do, obtain leave of absence to teach or to rest, and resume their work afterwards. This divides but does not shorten their course of study.

State Aid.

The Commonwealth has annually granted to the normal schools a considerable sum of money, to be divided among such pupils as are most needy and deserving. This school receives its proper share of such funds, and is able to render assistance to a number of students each year. Aid is not furnished during the first term of attendance. Applications for this aid are to be made to the principal, in writing, and must be accompanied by such evidence as shall satisfy him that the applicant needs the aid.

The State also gives the use of all the text-books required in the course, as well as free access to an ample and well-selected library of reference and general literature.

Incidental Advantages.

Besides special lectures and entertainments given each year at the school by prominent speakers and artists, many important facilities for general improvement are offered to pupils by the libraries, institutions and other means of culture in which Worcester is rich.

The extensive and well-arranged museum of the Worcester Natural History Society is open for inspection, and specimens in all departments can be borrowed by teachers and students, and taken to the school for purposes of study and illustration.

The hall of the American Antiquarian Society contains a notably rich store of interesting exhibits, and the library includes a rare treasury of books pertaining to American history.

The free public library stands high among the institutions of the kind in this country, for the effective relationship existing between it and the schools. Its large and well-endowed reference library, its well-filled circulating department, its reading rooms, supplied with the leading domestic and foreign papers and periodicals, afford exceptional opportunities to the schools. Special facilities are offered to teachers and pupils, and the librarian is unsparing in his efforts to render every aid in the choice and use of books or in any way in which he can assist the reader.

The Worcester Art Museum is to be added to the foregoing list.

Course in Geography for Teachers.

Mr. Robert M. Brown, teacher of geography at the normal school, has for a number of years conducted a course in geography for teachers in the public schools of Worcester and vicinity. The following subjects were included in the 1912–13 course: —

I. Observational geography.

II. Map construction.

III. The development of industries.
IV. The industries of the United States.
V. Text-books and their uses.
VI. The wind belts of the world.
VII. Regional geography.
VIII. Australia.
IX. Physical geography in the upper grades.
X. The world's great highlands and lowlands.

TO SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS.

Every year, in the months of April and May, our senior class is approaching the time of its graduation in June. The class usually includes from sixty to seventy members, mostly young women, about twenty-two years of age. These students, after having graduated from high schools, have spent three years in special study and practice, under our instruction and supervision, to fit themselves to teach in the public schools of this Commonwealth. All of them have given, in the schoolroom, good evidence of ability to teach. Their apprenticeship in carefully selected public schools of this city has afforded opportunity not only to acquire good methods of teaching, but also to gain considerable command of the art of school management and discipline. They are therefore capable of taking at once positions of some responsibility.

Superintendents in search of teachers usually wish to see candidates and talk with them, and candidates on their part desire to learn something about the positions they are asked to take. So it has come about that an increasing number of superintendents visit the school during the months above named, and have personal interviews with members of the senior class with reference to probable vacancies to occur in the autumn. We are always ready to afford opportunity for such interviews, as well as to furnish any information that may help to make engagements mutually advantageous. Thus it happens that a certain proportion of our most promising seniors are engaged to teach before graduation day arrives, and during the ensuing summer are making preparation for their work.

GRADUATES' ASSOCIATION.

The graduate body is so large that the expense of printing their names for the annual catalogue is no longer justified. It is proposed to publish the entire list but once in five years; in the intervening issues only such changes in names and addresses as have been reported during the year will appear. The latest class of graduates will be printed each year, together with the list of Class Secretaries, the officers of the Graduates' Association and the dates of all Class Reunions.

Officers of the Graduates' Association.

GRADUATES. 1876–1912.

[Graduates whose names are marked with (A) have, besides passing through the regular two years' course of study, served with full approbation for not less than a half-year as apprentices in the public schools of the city of Worcester. State Normal School at Worcester.

AIM AND PURPOSE OF THE SCHOOL.

The Board of Education, by a vote passed May 6, 1880, stated the design of the school and the course of studies for the State normal schools as follows: —

The design of the normal school is strictly professional; that is, to prepare in the best possible manner the pupils for the work of organizing, governing and teaching the public schools of the Commonwealth.

To this end there must be the most thorough knowledge: first, of the branches of learning required to be taught in the schools; second, of the best methods of teaching these branches; and third, of right mental training.

REQUIREMENTS FOR ADMISSION.

I. Candidates for admission to a Massachusetts State Normal School must have attained the age of seventeen years, if young men, and sixteen years, if young women; must be free from diseases or infirmities which would unfit them for the office of teacher; and must present certificates of good moral character. They must also submit detailed records of scholarship from the principal of the high school, or other school in which preparation has been made, showing the amount of time given to individual subjects and the grade therein, and such additional evidence of qualifications for the calling of a teacher as the Board of Education may require.

II. A candidate for admission as a regular student to a general course must present a diploma of graduation from a high school, or its equivalent, and, in addition, must offer satisfactory evidence of preparation in the subjects listed under "A," "B" and "C," amounting to 14 units, 10 of which units, however, must be in subjects given under "A" and "B," secured either by examination or certification. A unit represents a year's study in any subject in a secondary school, constituting approximately one-quarter of a full year's work.

A. Prescribed Subjects. — Three units.

(1) English literature and composition, . . . 3 units.

B. Elective Subjects. — At least 7 units from the following subjects: —

(2)	Algebra,	1 unit.
(3)	Geometry,	1 unit.
(4)	History,[1]	1 or 2 units.
(5)	Latin,	2 to 4 units.
(6)	French,	2 or 3 units.
(7)	German,	2 or 3 units.
(8)	Drawing,[2]	1 unit.
(9)	Physics,	1 unit.
(10)	Chemistry,	1 unit.
(11)	Biology, botany or zoölogy,[2]	1 unit.
(12)	Physical geography,[2]	1 unit.
(13)	Physiology and hygiene,[2]	1 unit.
(14)	General science,[2]	1 unit.
(15)	Stenography,	1 or 2 units.
(16)	Domestic science or manual training,	1 unit.
(17)	Commercial geography,[2]	1 unit.
(18)	Arithmetic,[2]	1 unit.
(19)	Bookkeeping,	1 unit.

For the present, the topics included within the foregoing subjects will be such as are usually accepted by Massachusetts colleges for entrance. The outlines submitted by the College Entrance Examinations Board (Substation 84, New York City) will be found suggestive by high schools.

C. Additional Subjects. — At least 4 units from any of the foregoing subjects, or from other subjects approved by the secondary school towards the diploma of graduation of the applicant. Work in any subject approved for graduation, in addition to that for which credit is secured by examination or certification may count towards these 4 units.

[1] History includes: ancient, mediæval and modern, English, American history and civics, and current events.

[2] Half units in these subjects will also be accepted.

III. Examinations. — Each applicant for admission, unless exempted by the provisions of sections IV. and V., must pass entrance examinations in the subjects as required under "A" and "B." Examinations in these subjects will be held at each of the normal schools in June and September of each year. Candidates applying for admission by examination must present credentials or certificates from their schools to cover the requirements under "C," and will not be given examinations in these subjects.

IV. Division of Examinations. — Candidates for admission to the normal schools may take all of the examinations at once, or divide them between June and September. If the examinations are divided, the candidate will receive no credit for the first examination, unless he secures by examination or certification a total of at least 5 of the 10 units required. Examinations cannot be divided between different years.

V. Admission on Certificates. — Candidates from public high schools which are on the certificate list of the New England College Entrance Certificate Board may be exempted by the principal of the normal school from examination in any of the subjects under "A" and "B" in which the principal of the high school shall certify that the applicant, in accordance with the practice of the high school, is entitled to certification to a college in the New England College Certificate Board. Candidates from public high schools approved for this purpose by the Board of Education may be exempted by the principal of the normal school from examination in any subjects under "A" and "B" in which the applicant has a record of B, or 80 per cent., in the last year in which such subject has been pursued, and when the principal of the high school states that the work of the applicant entitles him to certification. Credits secured by any candidate from the Board of Regents of the State of New York, or for admission to any college in the New England College Certificate Board, either by examination or certification, or in the examinations of the College Entrance Examination Board, shall be accepted towards the total of 10 units under "A" and "B." In addition to units granted by certification candidates must present credentials for subjects under "C."

VI. Admission as Special Students. — Graduates of normal schools and colleges and persons with satisfactory experience in teaching may be admitted as special students to all courses, under such regulations as the Board may prescribe. Applicants with satisfactory teaching experience may be admitted to the one year's course without examination or other requirements.

VII. Admission to Special Courses. — Persons possessing qualifications for the pursuit of work offered in special courses may be admitted as special students under such regulations as the Board may prescribe.

COURSES OF STUDY.

A Change in Regular Elementary Course to be made in September, 1914.

The six courses now offered are described below. They will be continued in the form given until the students now in attendance have graduated; but for all students entering the regular elementary course in September, 1914, and thereafter, this course will be readjusted so that the first two years of work will be complete, and will lead to a diploma qualifying a candidate to teach in the first six grades of the elementary school. A third year of study, distinct from the other two and leading to a second diploma, will then be open to those who shall have received the two-year diploma, to prepare for teaching in the seventh and eighth grades of the elementary school in addition to the first six grades.

V. The College Graduates' Course.

This course, open to students holding bachelors' degrees, is planned to prepare in one year for teaching in the elementary school, and comprises a review of elementary subject-matter, study of the principles and methods of teaching, together with observation, practice teaching and individual work of a professional character adapted to the needs of the particular student.

VI. The Teachers' Course.

This course of one year is offered to meet the needs of teachers of not less than three years of successful teaching, who recognize the need of professional training and desire to fit themselves for more efficient service in the elementary school by a better acquaintance with psychology and the principles and methods of teaching. Opportunity is granted, too, for study along the lines of special need and aptitude.

THE COURSES OF INSTRUCTION — THEIR AIMS AND SCOPE.

Educational and Child Psychology.

The fundamental aim of this course is to give the students a sympathetic and practical knowledge of child life. Since such knowledge is a prerequisite for every course in method, the study of psychology begins as soon as the student enters school and extends through one-half of the first year, with a review and slightly more professional treatment later in the course. The study of every topic in psychology is first considered with reference to the student's own self. This is done through the class experiment or by leading the students to consider their own past experiences. A transition is then made to child psychology. Members of the class are led to recall reminiscences of their childhood and are encouraged to make careful and frequent observations of children. Text-books are assigned and special reading is required. The subject-matter of psychology is carefully selected, only that which has some ultimate connection with practical problems of the schoolroom being chosen.

Principles of Education and School Management.

The work in this department comprises the following divisions: (a) general pedagogy: a study of the nature and the aim of the school, with special consideration of the learning process, the methods of study and of teaching pupils how to study; (b) principles of educational practice: including the meaning and function of education, the aims of education, the educational values of the school studies, the formation of the curriculum, and the relations of educational development to attention, interest, perception, apperception, memory, judgment and habit; (c) scientific method: an investigation of the teaching process, with a view to learning the principles underlying it and to observing their application in teaching elementary school subjects; (d) school and classroom management: consideration and discussion of the problems of control and discipline, leading to an appreciation of the philosophy of management and to the establishment of definite principles of government and supervision.

This work is supplemented by weekly periods of observation of classwork in the Elizabeth Street School (see page 26), and thus prepares the pupil with the aid of that observation directly for the later apprenticeship in the public schools of the city.

History of Education.

The goal of this course is the explanation of present-day practices and problems in education in the light of the past. The first few lessons are devoted to a general survey of educational conditions to-day. The next step is to go back historically to the study of education in the middle ages. The development of education from that time down to the present is briefly traced. Comparison between the past and present is frequently made. The purpose throughout is to discover the sources of our modern educational ideals, theories, methods, institutions and problems. Particular emphasis is put on the history of education in Massachusetts.

Hygiene.

The field covered in this course is general hygiene. It is designed to arouse in pupils an appreciation of the value of good health and to offer suggestions as to how one may preserve and improve his health. School hygiene and the problem of teaching hygiene to children are carefully considered. Enough anatomy and physiology are taught to enable students to comprehend the principles of hygiene. Text-books are used and frequent reference is made to current books and periodicals.

Rural Education.

This course is intended to give the students, most of whom are city-bred, an acquaintance with the problems of rural life that will make them more sympathetic as well as more intelligent teachers of the country schools where they will all begin their work. Carney's "Country Life and the Country School" is made the basis of the course, but all the recent books on this subject are supplied for reference.

Each student is required to spend a day in each one of the three types of country schools to be found in the neighborhood of Worcester: the one-room district school of the scattered farming community, usually of few pupils; the larger school of perhaps two rooms in the mill village; and the consolidated school at the centre of the town with four or six rooms to which the pupils are transported from the outlying districts. Reports are made of the lighting, heating, ventilation, the out-buildings, dressing-rooms, condition of the school yard, the water supply and its care, the use of the noon hour, etc. All schools visited are located by the students upon a map prepared for the purpose.

In addition to the regular class work talks are given to the class at intervals by persons experienced in this type of education, such as successful country teachers, superintendents and other rural workers. Collections are also made of photographs of rural school buildings, sites and playgrounds.

Nature Study.

The course in nature study has two ends in view: to prepare the pupil for the nature work in the public schools, and to increase her enjoyment of nature through sharpened observation. It runs through a year and a half, and each phase of it is supplemented by outdoor excursions.

In the first term the tree is studied as being the largest plant form and the most common in the city. Collections of leaves of the native and more common trees are made and the fruits observed. Attention is given to the autumn color display, and the evergreens are studied at the Christmas season. During the winter months the bare trees are learned through bark, shape, branching, leaf scars and buds. A study of the various woods follows with something of the principles and practice of forestry. Some attention is also given to mammal study, which includes our domesticated animals and some of the common wild animals of this region, emphasis being laid upon habits and adaptation rather than upon structure.

In the spring the wild flowers and birds keep the class well occupied, but each member does, also, some work in the school garden, which is cared for entirely by them.

sects, with especial attention to insect pests. The pedagogy of the subject is given a prominent place in the work, dealing with the special methods and devices of teaching nature; lesson plans are made and courses of study are considered. Considerable attention is given also to the literature of nature, for the purpose of familiarizing the student with authorities, various texts and the best available material on the subject.

English.

The work in English aims to establish first a clear understanding and appreciation of the value of good literature for children. This involves some study of the development of children's literature and includes wide reading of child classics with practice in the art of story-telling. Following this introduction there is a thorough consideration of the principles underlying the teaching of English in the elementary school and a study of the methods of teaching reading, phonics, language, grammar and elementary literature. Discussion of the problems arising under the curriculum is made a part of the work, especially as they have been observed by the students in their apprenticeship in the public schools of the city.

Geography.

The work in geography opens in the junior year with a detailed study of North America, with New England taken as the radial center in the study of the United States. Emphasis is laid upon the principle that industry and commerce constitute a response to climatic, physical and economic controls. This is followed by a similar study of Europe and South America. In the middle year, in preparation for the apprenticeship, much attention is given to methods of teaching geography, and to the sources and use of geographic material. The work with the senior class is designed to make a broad survey of the whole field of geography, with a consideration of the literature of the subject. Special attention is also given to Asia, Africa and Australia.

History and Civics.

The purpose of the course is twofold. First, it is to put the young teacher in the way of understanding the world of events about her and how the valuable things in this world of events have come to us. To accomplish this each student joins a current events' class, reading the periodicals and newspapers, taking notes and participating in discussions. She also joins a class in citizenship where she learns of the place of citizenship and government in the individual and community life of to-day. She also is a member of the history class where she studies anew the story of her country, its growth and its achievements. Second, it is to put the young teacher in a position of one who wishes to help children and beginners learn how to be intelligent members of society. This is the learning how to teach history and citizenship well, so that the child in each year of his development will have the greatest interest, pleasure and gain from being a good citizen, and from being a good learner from citizens of earlier times, that is, from the story of his country. This includes study of graded courses of study, aims of history teaching, methods of teaching in different grades, lesson planning, collecting children's books and illustrative material, visiting schools and public institutions and observation of actual classroom work.

Practical Science.

In the first part of the course a careful study is made of those raw materials and phenomena of nature which have their practical application in the industries and the arts. It is planned with reference to the courses of study commonly followed in the elementary schools, and is concerned with an investigation and comprehension of the principles and laws of nature and their adaptation to the needs of life, as a basis for making the teaching of the subject most helpful. It includes such subjects as the common commercial stones of the region, sand and clay, their formation and uses in manufacture; metals, their production, properties and uses; electricity, its forms and many applications; fuels and the general subject of heat and combustion;

fibres, textiles, etc. The work is closely correlated with the local industries, and their investigation, from the teacher's point of view, is made to yield valuable pedagogic training. In the latter part of the course attention is given to sanitary and applied chemistry, with especial emphasis upon the hygienic bearing of the subject. The study of the atmosphere, for instance, includes ventilation, humidity, the testing of air in schoolrooms, heating, cleaning and the prevention of air-borne contagions. In the study of food and nutrition the attempt is made to furnish the student with an intelligent basis for the ordering of her own life, as well as such knowledge as will lead her to be alert and efficient in dealing with her pupils. This part of the course is closely articulated with that in school hygiene.

Mathematics.

In this subject the aim is to make clear and fix in the minds of students the principles and processes of subject-matter and methods of teaching. The subject is developed through observation, investigation and reasoning. Information is made real by connecting facts with their uses in life. Modern business customs are followed in the applications of arithmetic. The mind of the student is led to grasp relations, to see the unity of the subject, to rely upon principles, to use judgment and to feel confidence in her results.

Drawing.

The course in drawing is based on the belief that the individual develops much as the race has developed, and that this subject can, therefore, have no vital part in the life of the child unless he is brought to see the need of it in planning for things to be made and used. Consequently, provision is made in it for planning, making and decorating in direct relation to needs. Color is studied in order to help one to dress in becoming ways and to decorate the home tastefully, and similarly a purpose or a need determines the time, character and form of the study of design, modelling and drawing whether it be free-hand, pencil, charcoal, perspective, water-color or other type of work. The scientific study of the problem involved precedes and is then supplemented by the practical applications of the principles to concrete planning and construction and decoration.

Manual Arts.

This work is not wholly separable from the work in drawing, but in large measure grows out of the study of the principles of color, design, representation and construction, and where possible working drawings are made the basis of it. Relations of form or of color or of proportion are kept prominently in mind, and attention is given to the many common applications of theory to costume, furniture, architecture, landscape gardening, decoration, etc. As time will permit, some study is given to the following different kinds of manual work: embroidery, paper-folding, weaving, basketry, cord-work, stencilling, printing, bookbinding, box-making, furniture making and laying out of gardens.

Music.

The music course aims to give the pupil: (a) a general knowledge of the subject, including the principles of correct production, practice in ear-training, sight-reading and writing of melodies; (b) an acquaintance with the pedagogical methods of teaching these same things in the elementary school, as well as with the preparation of a course of study in music; (c) a repertoire of rote-songs suitable for use in the first three grades; (d) training in choral singing of part-songs; and (e) a deeper appreciation of the meaning, beauty and power of good music.

Physical Training and Playground Supervision.

The training in this department continues throughout the course, and its purpose is twofold: first to aid the student to form good physical habits and to promote her personal efficiency by intelligent attention to the laws of health and hygiene; and second, to train her to become a capable worker in school gymnastics and in playground supervision. To these ends special indoor and outdoor exercises, games and dances are used according to the season or the needs of the students or the stage of the course. The indoor work includes marching, drills, fancy steps, folk and social dancing, jump-rope, battle ball, captain ball, nine court basket ball, exercises with wands, bells, clubs, fixed apparatus of Swedish and German types, and the exercises of the school-room. The outdoor work includes relay races and hoop work, stilts and the usual plays and games of children, besides coasting, tobogganing, cricket, scrub, tennis, playground dances, volley ball and baseball. Special training in the application and supervision of these exercises in school playground work is given by an interclass field day arranged in May, and also by experience as playground workers both in Worcester and in other cities and towns. It is supplemented by study of courses of instruction, of plans of playgrounds and of equipment of the playground and gymnasium.

Kindergarten.

The work in this department is designed to prepare for kindergarten teaching and may be taken as a course by itself or be combined with preparation for primary teaching (see pages 13 and 14). Besides the study of psychology, nature study, English, drawing and number, the course includes handwork, the study of kindergarten materials, their meaning and their use, Froebelian materials, songs and games, kindergarten methods and theories, study of kindergarten story material and the history of children's literature, the making of programs, the historical development of the infant-school and kindergarten movements, with special emphasis upon modern ideals and tendencies, and readings from Froebel. Considerable observation of kindergarten work and kindergarten organization is included in the course both before and after the practice teaching, which is done in the kindergartens of the city of Worcester. In addition to the regular admission requirements to the normal school, students of this department must have a considerable proficiency in piano-playing and in singing.

APPRENTICESHIP.

Practice teaching takes the form of an apprenticeship at teaching in the public schools of the city. As Worcester has a population of over one hundred and fifty thousand, and employs over seven hundred teachers in its public schools, the field thus furnished for practice is ample. The students serve, without pay, as apprentices to the regular teachers, taking an active part in the class management and having regularly a valuable teaching experience during a considerable portion of the time. Each appointment is for about six weeks of four school days each, and from three to six appointments are made, according to the course taken. The practice-work covers both the primary grades and the grammar grades, and thus each student acquires an intimate knowledge of the whole range of the public schools below the high school.

On the part of the normal school four members of the faculty act as supervisors of the apprentices, observing their teaching, examining their written work, directing the making of lesson-plans, and having frequent conferences with them and with the teachers as well. In this way the needs of the individual apprentice are known and met, and her progress is promoted by means of suggestions and criticisms which are freely offered. The apprentice herself is trained to observe and criticize her own development and her actual work in the classroom by keeping a diary which is submitted for criticism each week to the supervisor.

On Saturday, which is a school day at the normal school, the apprentice class is in attendance and meets each supervisor, and occasionally the principal, for general class discussions, as well as criticisms, explanations and suggestions that relate to the problems of the apprenticeship. Some time and special directions are also given to the preparation of new work, — such matters as consulting books and teachers, gathering material and comparing notes and exchanging views with other apprentices. Discussions of this kind bring the experience of the whole class before every member, and the different methods, devices and expedients used are passed through a sort of clearing-house, where each may select what seems to her of value.

In addition to the facilities for practice already described, the normal school has valuable privileges in a special school, the Worcester County Training School in Oakdale, a few miles from the city. Here the apprentice is received on the same terms as in the public schools of the city. She is under the direction of the superintendent and in the immediate charge of the teacher employed there. The difference, as may be inferred, is in having a class of boys to deal with who are exceptional in many ways. This experience in the management of a special type of pupil gives training in a direction not permitted by her other work, and develops the resourcefulness, adaptability, tact and teaching skill of the apprentice in a very valuable way.

Besides the books in the reference library of the normal school, which are loaned to the apprentices on the same terms as to the other pupils, there is a large and constantly increasing collection of material which is especially for the use of the apprentices. This comprises: (a) a special line of books useful in teaching, such as books on methods and devices, supplementary readers, collections of fairy tales and fables, historical stories, books on nature and nature study, and collections of music suitable for teaching rote-songs; (b) several hundred wall charts, illustrating natural history, the natural sciences, arts and manufactures, geography and methods of teaching such subjects as reading, writing and drawing; (c) about seven hundred pictures of birds and animals of all countries, mounted on cards, and large enough to be seen by a whole class; (d) collections of native animals, birds, insects, plants, woods, minerals, rocks, fossils and local manufactures; (e) maps, including political, topographical, relief models, outline blackboard stencils, outline maps on blackboard cloth, historical maps to illustrate the periods of discovery and of territorial growth, maps of campaigns and battles, and many others of special nature; (f) a collection of pictures of places of historic interest, of portraits of celebrated men and women, of types of fine architecture, painting and sculpture. Besides these collections, the school owns three duplicating machines, which the pupils are taught to use, and which enable the apprentices to print any number of copies of maps, drawings or notes on any subject of study, for the use of their pupils. All these things are made available by a card catalogue.

OBSERVATION.

(a) The model primary department in charge of a trained and very efficient superintendent is used as a school for observation, where throughout the course the students have opportunity for regular visitation and observation of teaching in the first three grades. They are given careful preparatory instruction in the points valuable to observe, reports of their work are made, and regular discussions in classes are held by the superintendent for the purpose of criticism, explanation and further instruction.

(b) The Elizabeth Street School, one of the city elementary schools, within a short distance of the normal school building, is also used by the State to supplement the apprentice system. Here selected teachers of the Worcester schools, who are also in the employ of the Commonwealth, exhibit to the students of the normal school, who observe in groups, the art of teaching in all details in every grade, from the kindergarten to the eighth. The teachers under observation present during the school year illustrations of practically every problem of elementary instruction, including not only those of general methods, but also those of special methods as applied in the teaching of the particular subjects of the elementary course. The observation of the applications of general methods is in charge of the supervisors of apprentices, and that of the applications of special methods is under the direction of the supervisors acting in cooperation with the teachers of the several departments. It is obvious that the stimulus and assistance afforded by this work are of great value.

ORAL EXPRESSION.

During the term of apprenticeship, a special opportunity for training in oral expression is provided by a weekly platform exercise. This exercise consists chiefly of speaking for a few minutes, with or without notes, to the assembled school from the platform of the main hall. The range of topics is unlimited, and the choice in each case rests wholly with the student who gives the exercise.

It is quite significant that, notwithstanding its obviously trying character, the platform exercise is and has always been one of the two or three most valued that the school offers. Its popularity with the students grows with their growing maturity throughout the course, and really culminates only when the graduates look back upon the exercise in after years. Their explicit testimony to this fact is unequivocal and almost unanimous.

The most striking evidence that this discipline accomplishes in a good degree the purpose for which it is maintained is afforded by the fact that each class in the school shows a distinct gain in precision, ease and effectiveness of speech over the class next below it; the seniors always taking the lead, and the pupils in their first term following at a long distance behind.

THE LIBRARY.

It is obviously a valuable qualification of a teacher to have an alert mind, in touch with the world of books and alive with interest in the important events of the day, and to possess the reading habit, combined with discriminating judgment and taste. To this end much has been done to build up a good library, selected with care and suited to the work and needs of the students. Books, magazines and newspapers are made easily accessible, and are frequently brought to the attention of the school as a whole by talks from teachers, by references in class work and by interviews with individual students.

Additions are constantly being made to the reference library, which now consists of about ten thousand carefully selected volumes. Magazines and newspapers are abundantly supplied in the reading room which is always open to the school. Here training to form good habits in regular and wise use of good newspapers and periodicals is carefully and systematically directed by the teacher of history and civics. Much discrimination is made by the faculty in the choice of books and other reading matter, in order that the future teachers of the State may be familiar with the best in all fields of their work.

Each student has practice in library work, acting as librarian of a collection of books. The whole reference library is taken care of in this way by members of the school, who work under the instruction and direction of one of the teachers. Through this training students learn how to safeguard books in their own schools later, when as teachers they become responsible for school libraries, or for books loaned by public libraries for the home reading of children.

Text-books are given out, recorded and finally collected at the end of the term by "class librarians." In this and in other ways methods are used which with modification will serve to meet the needs of the student when she becomes a teacher.

STODDARD TERRACE.

This building is a dormitory, built on the cottage plan, for the accommodation of about twenty girls. It is heated by steam and lighted by electricity, has a comfortable parlor and an attractive music room, and is, in every way, a convenient and satisfactory school home.

Here are all the necessary appliances for cooking and a spacious dining room. The price for room and board, together with a limited amount of laundry, is $160 for the school year, payable in advance, — $40 in September, $40 on November 15, $40 on February 1, and $40 on April 15. These rates are fixed for all the normal schools in the State.

The house is in charge of a competent and experienced matron and an efficient house-mother. Pupils whose homes are not in Worcester are advised to live at the dormitory.

LUNCH ROOM.

For the special convenience of pupils and teachers who care to avail themselves of the opportunity, a substantial hot luncheon is furnished at Stoddard Terrace at the very moderate price of 20 cents. Rooms have been fitted up expressly for this purpose, and on the days of largest attendance seventy-five or more persons are accommodated.

The rest of the pupils eat the lunch they have brought from home in the school lunch room. Here many of the necessary furnishings are provided; a hot closet makes it possible to warm food or drink, as desired, and boiling water is supplied for the making of cocoa.

GENERAL INFORMATION.

Tuition.

Tuition is free to residents of Massachusetts, but each non-resident pupil is required to pay a tuition fee of $25 at the beginning of each half-yearly session.

Physical Examination.

Every pupil who is admitted to the school is required to have a physical examination, and no pupil is allowed to remain whose physical condition is not found to be equal to the demands of the school work. Special efforts are made to counteract any tendency to overwork, over-excitement or hurry. Recitations or study periods are not longer than forty minutes, and during the ample and frequent intervals of relaxation school work is completely put aside. Systematic instruction is also given in hygiene and physical training, which has been described above (page 22).

The School Garden.

In furtherance of the courses in nature study and manual training the pupils maintain a school garden. Although the area is not large, by division of labor every pupil comes to have some first-hand knowledge of plants and some skill in caring for them.

They raise the common vegetables and flowers, — the things they will find best adapted for the gardens they will some day supervise as teachers. Their attention is directed to the possibilities of gardening even in the thickly settled portions of the city, and they are encouraged to plant seeds at home.

During the winter months window boxes in the various rooms of the school building furnish opportunity for indoor gardening.

Employment of Graduates.

The location of the graduates in schools of their own is accomplished almost wholly through the agency of this school. Many members of a senior class receive offers of positions before the close of the school year from superintendents who visit the school for the purpose of securing teachers to fill impending vacancies.

The school keeps in touch with the recent graduates and has on file a record of their work since graduation. From this list recommendations are made to superintendents who are in search of teachers of experience. Every year circulars seeking information concerning their present positions are sent to those graduates who are not teaching under a permanent system of advancement, as in most city schools. Thus most graduates of the school obtain their first charges, and many receive one or more offers of advancement at a later time, through the mediation of the school.

Scholarships at Harvard.

There are four scholarships in the scientific school of Harvard University for the benefit of graduates of the State normal schools. The annual value of each of these scholarships is $150, which is the price of tuition, so that the holder of the scholarship gets his tuition free.

The incumbents are originally appointed for one year, on the recommendation of the principals of the schools from which they have been severally graduated. These appointments may be annually renewed, on the recommendation of the faculty of the scientific school.

Leave of Absence.

It is often the case that, through weak health or stress of circumstances, pupils may be obliged to miss one, two, three or more terms. It is in the interest of such that the course need not be pursued uninterruptedly to the end. Students may, and often do, obtain leave of absence to teach or to rest, and resume their work afterwards. This divides but does not shorten their course of study.

State Aid.

The Commonwealth has annually granted to the normal schools a considerable sum of money, to be divided among such pupils as are most needy and deserving. This school receives its proper share of such funds, and is able to render assistance to a number of students each year. Aid is not furnished during the first term of attendance. Applications for this aid are to be made to the principal, in writing, and must be accompanied by such evidence as shall satisfy him that the applicant needs the aid.

The State also gives the use of all the text-books required in the course, as well as free access to an ample and well-selected library of reference and general literature.

Incidental Advantages.

Besides special lectures and entertainments given each year at the school by prominent speakers and artists, many important facilities for general improvement are offered to pupils by the libraries, institutions and other means of culture in which Worcester is rich.

The extensive and well-arranged museum of the Worcester Natural History Society is open for inspection, and specimens in all departments can be borrowed by teachers and students, and taken to the school for purposes of study and illustration.

The hall of the American Antiquarian Society contains a notably rich store of interesting exhibits, and the library includes a rare treasury of books pertaining to American history.

The free public library stands high among the institutions of the kind in this country, for the effective relationship existing between it and the schools. Its large and well-endowed reference library, its well-filled circulating department, its reading rooms, supplied with the leading domestic and foreign papers and periodicals, afford exceptional opportunities to the schools. Special facilities are offered to teachers and pupils, and the librarian is unsparing in his efforts to render every aid in the choice and use of books or in any way in which he can assist the reader.

The Worcester Art Museum is to be added to the foregoing list.

LECTURES.

During the year 1913–14 the following lectures were given at the school: —

TO SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS.

The two or three months preceding graduation in June are especially favorable for visits to the school by superintendents who desire to know the abilities of our senior students and who are thinking of engaging teachers for their schools. The senior class usually includes from sixty to seventy members, mostly young women, about twenty-two ye[redacted] after having graduated from high [redacted] in special study and practice, u[redacted] vision, to fit themselves to teach in the public schools of this Commonwealth. All of them have given, in the schoolroom, good evidence of ability to teach. Their apprenticeship in carefully selected public schools of this city has afforded opportunity not only to acquire good methods of teaching, but also to gain considerable command of the art of school management and discipline. They are therefore capable of taking at once positions of some responsibility.

Superintendents in search of teachers usually wish to see candidates and talk with them, and candidates on their part desire to learn something about the positions they are asked to take. So it has come about that an increasing number of superintendents visit the school during the months above named, and have personal interviews with members of the senior class with reference to probable vacancies to occur in the autumn. We are always ready to afford opportunity for such interviews, as well as to furnish any information that may help to make engagements mutually advantageous. Thus it happens that a certain proportion of our most promising seniors are engaged to teach before graduation day arrives, and during the ensuing summer are making preparation for their work.

GRADUATES' ASSOCIATION.

The graduate body is so large that the expense of printing their names for the annual catalogue is no longer justified.
